Twitter Thread by Redheaded Liberty

Redheaded Liberty
@TRHLofficial

One of the most important threads I'll share. It contains organized information so you can draw your own conclusions on what could happen on 1.6.20. and the parameters of Mike Pence's role.

WaPo says he's powerless.

Gateway Pundit says he's Oz.

The truth lies in the middle.

The confusion as to Mike Pence's power comes down to the different interpretations of the Electoral Count Act of 1887 and how each media outlet reports their versions.

Read it for yourself, here:

https://t.co/yv6dVKMGVr

What we know:
-One Rep and one Senator must both object to the electors in order for each House to debate & vote.

What we still don’t know for sure:
-The limits of Mike Pence’s power. Can he throw out slates in a stalemate? Is he a tie breaker? Is his job just to open envelopes?

2. The muddled language of section 15 has puzzled scholars for decades
Read it for yourself here:

https://t.co/tA1xMmrzHh

3. The Constitution center has an objective way of explaining law. Read their write up here. https://t.co/9xcLgvxd9g

The best breakdown I could find of possibilities written before they became relevant, read them here: https://t.co/zahKRzkEIW

The Current rules for elector objections (last updated 12/8/20) Page 12 of 13 seems to clarify the issue of governor certification in the event of a stalemate between the Senate and The House, but personally I’m unsure as to its lawfulness. https://t.co/QoEsEuhPuH

I believe their was fraud and I also believe they pulled it off. I would be shocked if Joe Biden isn’t sworn in on noon on January 20th.

There. I hate the hellsite.