United Cities and Local Governments

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

United Cities and Local Governments (UCLG) is an umbrella international organisation for cities, local and regional governments, and municipal associations throughout the world that is concerned with representing and defending the interests of local governments on the world stage.[1]

The organization achieved inclusion of Goal 11: Sustainable cities and communities into Agenda 2030,[13][14] aggregates best local practices into action plans,[15][16] provides regular updates on the progress and proposals to High-level Political Forum on Sustainable Development.[17][18] Its day-to-day activities include hosting meetings of mayors and other local and regional leaders,[19] running joint projects with partners,[20] organizing international peer-to-peer training on local policies and practices,[21] and advocacy for the interests of local and regional governments at the UN.[22]

Since founding in 2004,[2] UCLG is headquartered in Barcelona (the World Secretariat, Metropolis & UCLG Regions), with its regional offices in Brasilia, Brussels, Istanbul, Jakarta, Kazan, La Paz, Ottawa & Rabat.[9] It is the largest organization of sub-national governments in the world, with over 240,000 members in over 140 UN Member States and understands itself as the united voice and world advocate of democratic local self-government, de facto representing over half the world's population across seven world regions: Africa, Asia-Pacific, Euroasia, Europe, Middle East & West Asia, Latin America and North America.[3]

The organisation's work programme focuses on:[1]

- Increasing the role and influence of local government and its representative organisations in global governance;
- Becoming the main source of support for democratic, effective, innovative local government close to the citizen;
- Ensuring an effective and democratic global organisation

City Solutions Platform Outcomes

Melbourne's climate solutions were focused on flood management and liveability. The CSP process was valuable and unique to the City due to early, pre-tender engagement with businesses, academic institutions and other key stakeholders. Melbourne were very happy with the outcomes and the ability of solution providers to co-create solutions together, as well as with the city.

A number of design solutions that came from the CSP activity were taken forward by the city. The levee design solution has helped to inform a strategic opportunity plan for the creek and large scale flood storage. Having both attended the CSP workshop, the City of Melbourne developed a commercial partnership with Rambøll, resulting in a high-level cloudburst masterplan focussed on innovative flood management solutions for the Arden-Macaulay precinct. Rambøll won the $65,000 tender for this work as it was released only to the solution providers who attended the CSP workshop, thereby allowing Rambøll to apply with a competitive bid. Based on this work, the City are now looking to develop and fund a next stage Arden Climate Response plan with a range of stakeholders. This will be integrated into

Homeless project launched in Sydney

People sleeping rough in Sydney will soon be taken off the streets and given a key to an apartment with a tenancy agreement, under a radical new plan to tackle homelessness.

The Common Ground initiative brings together the public and private sectors to make available either purchased or newly-built apartments to homeless people for 30 per cent of their earnings.

Residents will be able to stay as long as they need and during their tenancy will have access to outreach programs such as drug and alcohol counselling, education and employment training.

The concept is based on a model established in 1990 by Rosanne Haggerty, a leading creator of solutions to homelessness in the United States.
