How I invest my money

A thread...

Last year when I stepped down as the CEO of nearbuy - I was a classic case of paper wealth with no cash in hand.

I had stupidly over indexed on equity, made terrible mistakes with money (see thread the end of this thread) and had no other income stream.

I realized the biggest mistakes I had made was investing in largely illiquid assets - startups and real estate. With extremely poor liquidity.

So while I had "wealth" I did not have any income.

The last year I have been working on changing that.

1. Term Insurance

A decade back I bought a term insurance plan for 25 years, for 10Cr.

Which means if I die in the next 25 years (by the time I am 55), my family will get 10Cr (over and above my ongoing loans). If I don't die, I get nothing.

My logic at 30 was that by 55 I should be able to get to the 10Cr mark myself. Until then I rely on an insurance plan.

This amount I believe takes care of all current and future needs of my family.

This gives me mental peace, should something happen to me ever!

Of the disposable income I have (after paying for my bills and needs) I split it into 40:40:20

The first 40% goes into buying stocks of individual companies; split into 25% and 15%.

Shopify
Square
Zoom
Tesla
Indians can invest upto $250,000 every year in international stocks (public + private), which is way more than I will ever have :)
I use @INDmoneyApp for investing - it is incredibly easy to use and helps me track.
Highly recommended.
The remaining 15% goes into Indian company stock. Again, I pick market leaders, but instead of emerging tech I go for established sectors.
My current picks are
ITC
HDFC
Reliance
Spicejet
Indian Hotels
Shree Cement
Since Gement

The last 20% is reserved for startup investing.

It is where I have lost my most money and made my most money as well.

25% in US stocks - I pick market leaders in emerging tech. So the 4 stocks I have currently are

I would not call myself an angel investor, since I do not have the capital depth to invest in all the good ideas I come across.

So I rarely invest directly in a startup (unless highly recommended or a founder I absolutely loved interacting with)

I mostly invest in startups through @AngelList

You can follow syndicates on AL, through which you get a deal flow. And most allow you to invest starting $1,000

I am yet to see any gain come through AL - this is more of a wild bet on my part.

In summary:

25% in US tech market leaders - with a 15 year horizon, through @INDmoneyApp
15% in Indian traditional market leaders - with a 15 year horizon, through @zerodhaonline
40% in momentum Indian stocks, through @serodhaonline
20% in startups, through @AngelList

PS:

I do not have any Fixed Deposits (hate them!)
I haven't invested in any debt funds (frankly, they arent that bad, but I am willing to take on risk)
My only liability is a (BIG) home loan

My investment strategy is aggressive for a 40 year old with a family of wife, 2 kids and 2 parents. But that is just me.

This should ideally be the investment strategy for someone in their 20s 30% US Stocks + 40% Indian stocks + 30% Indian Debt (no startups please)
