

Twitter Thread by ■■■■■ ■■■■

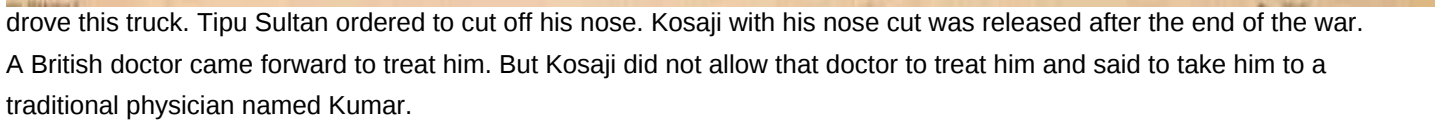

■■■■■ ■■■■

@Sandy49363539

Britishers looted our precious knowledge acquired over thousands of years.

"The Third Mysore war took place between Tipu Sultan and Britishers. The Mysore soldiers captured a truck which was carrying food for the British army. A simple Marathi named Kosaji was the one who

He said, "Dr. Kumar will fix my cut nose again." Everyone started laughing. But they agreed to his request and took him to Kumar. The local physician, Kumar, was doing a brick kiln business.

The British doctor, who saw this miracle, drew a painting of the miraculous incident and sent it to Britain. On seeing the message, Joseph

He went to London and performed the world's first plastic surgery in 1816. It was then known as a Carpué operation.

How did Dr. Kumar know plastic surgery?

An ancient Indian physician, named Sushruta, wrote about plastic surgery around 2500 years ago. The book, Sushruta Samhita, still contains the details of the surgery. Though it is called plastic surgery, no plastic was involved in this surgery.

Those who practiced this surgery for generations were doing simple brick kiln business.

Picture of Kosaji from British museum.

Credit-fb

@LostTemple7

@Lost History1