May as well kick off with a wee list of people I think you should follow, if you want to learn more about Autism;

#Autism #AutismAwarenessWeek #AutismAcceptance

@CarlyJonesMBE , her work in addressing the inequalities that Autistic Women face is outstanding, and she is also one of the most approachable and friendly people you'll ever meet!

@commaficionado for his brilliant ways of explaining things on Twitter, as well as his anecdotes of being an Autistic Teacher

@Purpleella has a brilliant YouTube channel, which has some brilliant videos that explain some aspects of Autism much better than I ever could!

@AnnMemmott for her academic critiques, and her extensive experience in a number of roles, and she has an excellent way of explaining things.

@AutieAndy for his tireless work in setting up an online gaming community for Autistic People, and what a brilliant resource it has been for Autistic People of all ages!

@doodlebeth for her brilliant illustrations that explain things in a clear, concise and eye-catching way!

@tinkerbellbites for her outstanding work in the SEN field, providing considerable expertise and support to families who are fighting for their children's right to an education.

@Sara_Rose_G for her soon-to-be released book, which I'm looking forward to getting when it is released!

And sticking with the topic of writing, @fodderfigure 's book has had rave reviews from many quarters, and I thoroughly recommend it!

@Fi_ferris for her tireless work in Ireland, lobbying to improve services and support for Autistic People

@NCWeek for her tireless work promoting Neurodiversity, and her passion and enthusiasm have helped to produce some amazing results!

@KieranRose7 for his tireless advocacy and work towards providing proper training for organisations to become much more supportive of Autistic People.

An inspiration for baldies everywhere

@nothank_dude , who set up a great discord channel, which provides a great community of Autistic People to chat and communicate!

@JudeMorrow10 who has worked to improve Autism Training and to provide proper expertise of Autism for employers here in Northern Ireland

@ellenfromnowon for the cat content, basically.

@AusomeCharlie for her tireless work in professional advocacy

@haleymossart for her work in advocacy in America, especially in legal circles!
