I didn’t miss it, I interpreted it differently than you. Let me explain.

There are two main aspects to this story. 1) Tr conned The People out of the tax revenue they were rightfully due, and 2) that he misrepresented his business abilities. /1

@mhbx I don’t think it’s wrong for someone to want to keep what they earn, I have a problem with the tax avoidance industry to which the govt gave life. /2

@mhbx I think the system is the parasitical con by unnecessarily siphoning resources from our economy. The 1% paying the 1% to navigate the complexities created by bureaucrats, doesn’t help the poor. /3

@mhbx As for Tr’s business abilities, self promotion is a skill that’s necessary for any entrepreneur. The article paints a picture of someone who used that skill to manipulate people’s buying decisions. /4

@mhbx Tr sells things that people don’t have to buy, like condos, golf memberships, ties, etc. Getting people’s attention is the first step to getting them to buy, and that’s what self promotion is all about. /5

@mhbx With relatively few exceptions, people were pleased with the products they bought from him, and the vast majority of his employees spoke highly of their experiences. /6

@mhbx I believe that the professional ruling class and the capitalists who symbiotically support them, have conned you into believing that Tr is something that he’s not. /end
