1. The first step in the process of the investigation is the identification of the problem. This is done by the investigator who is responsible for the investigation. The investigator will identify the problem and then will determine the scope of the investigation. The investigator will then determine the objectives of the investigation and will then determine the methods of the investigation. The investigator will then determine the data that is needed for the investigation and will then determine the sources of the data. The investigator will then determine the analysis of the data and will then determine the conclusions of the investigation. The investigator will then determine the recommendations of the investigation and will then determine the implementation of the recommendations. The investigator will then determine the evaluation of the investigation and will then determine the final report of the investigation.

"The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the smell of the earth. It was a rich, dark, and slightly damp scent, like the earth after a long rain. I had heard that the air in the mountains was clean, but I didn't realize it would be so... grounding. The sun was just rising, painting the sky in soft shades of orange and pink. The mountains in the background were shrouded in a light mist, making them look like giants in a dream. I took a deep breath, feeling the cool air fill my lungs. It was a moment of pure peace, a moment where all my worries seemed to melt away. I had come here to find myself, and in that first breath, I felt like I had found a piece of my soul."
