

Twitter Thread by sriram

sriram

@SriramKannan77

With the results are out. The public has chosen a Govt & all of us should accept this.

There is no point in blaming a sect of people etc., The result was almost expected & hence nothing wrong. Few chose to be ostrich & were pinning hopes which were different from reality.

I won't blame them but if they were following politics from SM alone, they will be like that. In SM, we have the option to choose our friends whose vibes match with us.

EPS on the other h& has done a good job. He had proved as a good CM. Now he has got an opportunity to be a good Opposition leader.

One should not 4get that the proper working of EPS or AIADMK is mainly attributed to the way DMK functioned as an opposition party.

DMK kept the Govt on tenterhooks. With their claims & declarations, they have made Govt reactive in almost all the issues. Govt might have had plans but MKS was swift to pounce on the issue & gave suggestions (which the Govt already froze).

This ended as if DMK's suggestions were adopted by the ruling Govt.

It is easy to point fingers when one is in opposition. MKS will realize now the serious issues. The debts TN is having. He had promised or doled many freebies - one has to wait & watch how he h&les it.

If the Opposition harps on these, he might budge but it will be a big burden on the people (a class who never voted for AIADMK).

What's supposed to be worried is about the polarization that is taking place. There is nothing wrong with opposing selective secularism.

We should oppose the policies & practices but not the people.

This is taking us in the wrong direction. In the guise of opposing the wrong policies, people even go to the extent of ridiculing Gods of other faiths.

A real spiritual guy would never do that - a religious fanatic might do as he never understands God. God is One & how can we ridicule God if we are a real practitioner of Spiritual aspects?

AIADMK should now focus on two aspects

How to keep the flock together (with no power & no money, the glue will no longer work)

How to act as a Constructive Opposition

BJP is still not approved by Tamils.

This is attributed to the strong perception created by the so-called rationalists of BJP - as a party of Brahmins, a party of North India & a party who mercilessly killing minorities.

If we look at history, Southern India & particularly TN had never faced the wrath of the Mughal or Islamic kings. The missionaries were smart enough to penetrate without violence & without making people realize that they are being bought or converted.

If BJP has to win over TN, (if at all they have a plan), they should start from council elections. The connectivity to the people only will help them. They have to work doubly hard to erase the perception.

Lead by example. Participating in the television debates will only harass them. You cannot debate with an idiot & expect to win. Have a direct connection with people.

The party should now focus on developing leaders.

No remote control exercise. Let the TN team decide what is good for the party within the state.

Let all the old-war-horse take rest. Motor-mouths should be shut immediately - even if it meant sacking them. They do more damage to the party than good. Nominate leaders from TN BJP for tasks at the National level. Make them popular here.

I am sure, DMK, as a party is an organized one & they will always deliver a good administration in an organized manner. (they may swindle money & who doesn't do that). the opposition parties should patiently wait & act as a constructive opposition party.

They should not keep opposing for the sake of it.

But will all these happen?