

Twitter Thread by sriram ■■

sriram ■■

@SriramKannan77

Religion is like a large tree with many branches and branches; what should be done so that we might reap the benefits of all religions in this life and in the afterlife? -

This was Yudhishtira's query to his grandfather Bhishma.

We shall not convey the entire full discourse in the 108th chapter of the Rajdharmanushasan Parva under the Mahabharata Shanti Parva.

The meaning of a verse is being highlighted -

What is a ten-fold more important listener than the broader public,
Upadhyaya is more important than the 10 Acharyajans, and Acharya is always more essential than the ten Shrotris.
10 Upadhyayas are more important than ten fathers, and ten mothers are more vital than ten fathers.

Nothing in a man's life is more significant than his mother; she is his guru.

The Upadhyaya, the Acharya, the superior, and the deities are all involved in the service of the mother and father...

Ramayana is the mother, and Geeta is the father.

Jayatu Sanatan