

Twitter Thread by Michael Harriot

Michael Harriot

@michaelharriot

Breaking News:

In a 5-4 decision, the conservative judges on the Supreme Court reject the final death row appeal of a Nazarene minister convicted of teaching Christian Race Theory.

Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson issues blistering dissent, calling it a “crucifixion.”

“I told you she was soft on crime,” says Josh Hawley.

“We can’t have these people teaching these sermons on public mounts, said Galilee Governor Ron DeSatanis. “Telling children to repent for their sins makes kids feel bad.”

33-year-old community organizer and protest leader

Yeshua bin Yusuf, who went by the street name Jesus, was convicted by an all-white jury after his violent arrest resulted in at least one officer losing an ear, according to the police report.

Authorities said his protest organization was really a front for his gang activity. While Jesus confessed that he had about 12 friends who were disciples, he claimed he was not gang affiliated.

“That’s what they all say,” explained Sen. Marjorie Taylor Greene. “He also claimed he was ‘saving’ prostitutes but if you read the message boards, it’s clear he was a sex trafficker. Why else would Mary Magdalene always be around? What do you expect? He was an anchor baby, too!”

At his latest Make Judea Great Again rally, King Herod praised the decision, saying he was glad they got rid of the so-called “King of the Jews,” while renewing the call for Mary & a Joseph to produce a birth certificate for their deceased son.

While some cautioned that Jesus could still get a reprieve from the Most High, Rand Paul said he would filibuster any legislation to forgive the convicted felon.

“It’s over, he’s dead” said Tucker Carlson on Friday night’s show. “Good riddance to another immigrant!”

“Unless you fly with me to Cancun, you’ll never to hear the name Jesus again,” said Ted Cruz.

“I doubt it,” said Thomas.