Chrome has 3.2 billion users.

But most people don't know how to unlock its full potential.

Here are 10 chrome extensions you'll wish you knew sooner (all free):

1. Summari

AI-powered assistant that instantly summarizes any long text.

<https://t.co/1WxNzFi8dE>

2. Audioread

Don't have time to read?

Listen instead!

Audioread turns any article, pdf, or email into a podcast using the latest AI narrator.

<https://t.co/y23YEmM5i1>

A dark blue banner for Audioread. In the top left corner is the Audioread logo with the text "formerly Audioblogs". In the top right corner is the text "My Account". The main text in the center reads "Turn your reads into podcasts" in a large, bold, light blue font. Below this, in a smaller white font, it says "Listen to any article, PDF, email, etc in your podcast app". At the bottom center is a blue button with a gradient that says "Try for Free" in white, with "Starting at $1.99/mo" in small white text below it. On the right edge, there is a vertical pink button with a speech bubble icon and the word "Feedback".

1/1 I spent a bit of time looking at the Canada COVID Alert app this evening. Bottom line: this app is pretty much the model for how to do this kind of tech.

2/1 It's super clear about what data it collects and doesn't, and about how it works. This is not easy stuff to convey.

Your privacy is protected

- Control: You can turn off location sharing at any time.
- It has no easy access to your contacts.
- It has no access to your address.
- It has no access to your phone number.
- It has no access to your health information.
- It has no access to any other data on your phone.

How it works

- The app uses Bluetooth to exchange location data with nearby phones.
- Every day, it creates a list of random codes that are shared with all the nearby devices.
- If you're near a device with one of those random codes, the app will notify you.

Seconded. We've had visitors from their shop in our shop who are exactly that.
