

Twitter Thread by TaLynn Kel @NYCC

TaLynn Kel @NYCC

@TaLynnKel

Yt people constantly ask me how they can do better & be better & the very 1st step is the most painful & that is understanding that everything you've ever believed about yourself, your history, your autonomy, your advances, your accomplishments, & your heroism is a huge lie.

It's a huge lie that's been perpetrated to protect whiteness from its crimes against humanity.

All your heroes are villains.

All the values you claim define you are rooted in the murder and exploitation of others.

Every accomplishment you have today is at the expense of many other people who never have the opportunity to compete because violence, poverty, and lies lock them out of access.

Yt people cannot envision, much less create a "success" that isn't at the expense of other people.

And until you can absorb and accept that truth, that you, your parents, your grandparents, and everyone that came before built their legacies in the graves of others, intentionally, then collaborated to scrub it from history, you will ALWAYS be the villain in this narrative.

And even once you realize and accept this, if you do not choose to fight against your best interests, because your best interests are the poison offspring of horrendous abuses and atrocities, you are still the villain.

And once you start fighting, the other yt people in your life who choose to shield themselves in the lies of whiteness will see you as their enemy and they will do what they can to silence you.

This is the battle. This is the war. Most yt people aren't brave enough to risk it.

They break at the first sign of trouble. Cuz doing this work takes self-sacrifice and yt people aren't invested in that. They aren't invested in equity for everyone, just them. They aren't willing to risk their safety...not if they don't have to.

History has shown they'd rather kill everyone who could possibly threaten it instead.

I'd love for them to prove me wrong. They won't but a Black woman can dream. Hopes and dreams are kinda all I got.