(THREAD) There is so much less to this headline than meets the eye—indeed, one could argue the story is interesting only in ways the headline doesn't hint at—that it's a shame Bloomberg, a great media outlet, published this in this way. Read on for more.

1/ Everyone knows that the next step in the Mueller probe will come after the November 6 election, as Mueller is currently foregoing any additional steps in his work because of the DOJ's recommended "60-day pre-election" rule against action on cases with political implications.

2/ Everyone knows that Mueller has completed or nearly completed the Obstruction portion of his investigation (indeed, might have completed it long ago), so even news that Mueller would be ready to issue findings on Obstruction sometime after November 6 would not be surprising.

3/ Everyone knows that Rosenstein fears for his job, and fears for Sessions' job, and fears for Mueller's job, so no one would be surprised to learn that Rosenstein was pressuring Mueller to release some sort of report shortly after November 6 in order to show his progress.

4/ Everyone knows that behind the scenes Trump has been pressuring the FBI/DOJ to "wrap up" their work, so—while it was not just inappropriate but possibly illegal for Trump to pressure Rosenstein during a recent plane trip—no one would be surprised to learn that he did that.

5/ Everyone knows that when a federal probe starts with 17 prosecutors and then get pleas/cooperation deals from major figures in the case—Flynn, Manafort, Cohen, Gates, and Papadopoulos—it can start to shed prosecutors, because it's proceeding expeditiously through its work.

6/ Everyone knows that White House officials—under the guise of talking to the press as anonymous "U.S. officials"—has been trying to hurry Mueller's investigation along by falsely claiming that it's almost over. Administration officials have been doing this since mid-2017.

7/ Taking all that into account, read the Bloomberg article again—and not just the headline. Read the whole thing. It underscores that Manafort would never have gotten a cooperation deal if his testimony weren't going to lead to significant indictments, and not on Obstruction.

8/ The Bloomberg article also underscores that Mueller's ardently trying to get answers from Trump on the topic of collusion, and may well seek a subpoena to get his testimony—something that not only wouldn't he do but that would be impossible to do in a "wrapping up" timeline.

9/ Right now we are less than three weeks pre-election. It benefits the Republicans enormously to tell media—without any evidence whatsoever, and having falsely spread the same story at least five times before since 2017—that Mueller is about to wrap up and hasn't found anything.

10/ Each time the Republicans' anonymous (false) leaks work—and always for the same reason. Non-attorney/non-investigator journalists credit them, because they earn clicks and attention; attorneys and investigators not up on the Russia case credit them to avoid looking foolish.

11/ And each and every time, attorney/investigator journalists who're knowledgeable about the Russia probe say the same thing—these reports are false and come from the White House. Mueller is not close to finishing his work on collusion. And each time we're exactly right.

12/ Cohen just spent 50 hours with federal investigators; Manafort just got a sweetheart cooperation deal; Flynn got a deal and then spent a year giving the feds information on collusion. There are precisely zero signs that Mueller has issued even half of his indictments.

13/ We have major media reports confirming that Erik Prince lied to Congress. We have major media reports confirming that Trump Jr. lied to Congress. We have George Nader telling Mueller that Trump Jr. agreed to collude with 3 nations on August 3, 2016. Media need to wake up.

14/ Every piece of public info on the Mueller probe confirms that there are more indictments to come—and witnesses are being given sweetheart deals left and right because they have information on collusion. Yet every few months GOP operatives play the media in the same way.

15/ Will Mueller reappear post-11/6? Yes. Will he issue an Obstruction report soon? He may. Does Rosenstein want him to work fast? Yes. Is Trump trying to hurry everything? Yes. Are GOP operatives lying to media? Yes.

Does this have anything to do with the collusion probe? No.

16/ Mainstream media has been terrified since Day 1—back in October 2016—that they would be shown to be chumps for believing this collusion investigation might turn something up. They've hedged their bets at every turn—even as every piece of evidence has turned up inculpatory.

17/ Were I a GOP operative with no scruples I'd be doing just what GOP operatives are doing: feeding the media a story every few weeks that the probe is almost over because you know that their innate professional cowardice already compels them to want to believe exactly that.

18/ Fortunately, what I am is a longtime attorney/investigator who looks at facts—not a fulltime journalist looking over my shoulder to see if I'm going to be made a fool of. Every piece of information we have tells us Mueller's collusion probe is going just fine thank you.

19/ What Bloomberg did was get info from an anonymous—likely White House—source that was intended to depress Democratic turnout during the midterms. It was intended to drain Democrats of hope. But then you read the article and you see the facts don't line up with the headline.

20/ Note too that Mueller may issue a report on one subject but not another (e.g. obstruction, not collusion); a partial report on just one subject; a report that's non-public because it's blocked from publication by the GOP.

We have 9-12 months minimum left in this saga. /end

PS/ I do not now—nor have I ever—predicted the timing of indictments; no one can or should do that. But there will be indictments for Trump Jr., Prince, Kushner, and Stone—at a minimum—before any collusion probe is completed. Anyone following this case closely will tell you that.

PS2/ Remember—should you be inclined for even a moment to believe this (likely) White House "leak"—that all of America was promised by Team Trump, in August '17, that the whole probe would be over well before Thanksgiving '17. That was a year ago. And nothing is over.

PS3/ When Papadopoulos was indicted, I said: more coming. When Flynn was indicted, I said: more coming. When Gates was indicted, I said: more coming. When Manafort was indicted, I said: more coming. When Cohen was indicted, I said: more coming.

Legal Expertise 5, White House 0.

PS4/ I can't urge talented, insightful journalists not to fall for these White House tricks—as the commitment in journalism is often to one's own carefully curated (instinctively obsequious) professional reputation than anything else. But attorneys are obligated to do better.

PS5/ There is no—I repeat no—credible public evidence suggesting Mueller is anywhere close to done, and indeed a mountain of published evidence confirming that he is getting all the cooperation he needs—and on the collusion question—from major figures in Trump's circle.
