"The summer's protests forced businesses to denounce systemic racism and pledge to address pressing equity issues."

>Protests forced businesses

Correct me if I'm wrong, but they're saying violence works?

"Initiatives that would have taken companies years to craft now launching at a lightning pace as executives move to embed diversity & inclusion into their core business strategy. Equity and belonging will likely remain front of mind."

Faced with crisis, these are the solutions.

I interrupt this thread for physiognomy check on author (left) and quoted h*mosubcon (right).

Fellas, I must admit I would bleach left; WYB?

Different solution for right, naturally.

The 2% Solution, eh...

On top: carrot

On bottom: stick

Get ready to diversity your executive team with this new position: Chief Black Person.

This ties directly into the @FamedCelebrity post I RT'd this morning (which you should all read).

Gemal Harris had a barrier-breaking win by getting 1% of the DNC primary vote and being selected for the Veep slot on a ticket that is attempting to steal the presidency via fraud.

Huge win, truly #BlackGirlMagic. Person of the year!

I think I've already lost more followers for saying IWB this ebony queen than any other post... Listen up, I may be racist, but I sure as hell ain't gay!
