What do the Atlantic, Business Insider, Vox, Salon, Slate, BuzzFeed, Washington Post, New York Times have in common? They've all knowingly published lies about me over the past four years. There's zero honesty or accountability in journalism. We're going to change that in 2021.

I'm in a unique position to know just how dishonest the mainstream media is, because I've read lies about myself in so many major news outlets. I know who the bullshitters are, on the left and right, because they've all targeted me to try to score cheap points.

I have a hard time trusting anything that's reported the mainstream political media, because I've read lies about myself most of the major publications publications, thus forcing me to question what all else they might be lying about. It's a really creepy position to be in.

What's even more disturbing is how few people truly know how dishonest the mainstream political media is. If it's from a big name publication, they just believe it. That's because they haven't read lies about themselves in those news outlets, like I have. It's eye opening.

I'm not even talking about misinformation. I'm talking about outright and intentional lies that major publications made up about me for competitive reasons, because they were worried Palmer Report was getting too big, and didn't want the competition. Truly evil tactics.

I got into political journalism five years ago specifically to push back against the false narratives that the mainstream media was hyping for ratings. I was hoping I could change the media. Instead they just tried to silence me, as viciously as possible.

In 2021 I'm going to build Palmer Report into a large enough and broad enough news outlet that we're a force to be reckoned with, too big and influential to be vulnerable to the lies that larger competitors might make up about us.

My end goal will still be to force the mainstream media to finally be more honest, if only because they don't want the wrath of Palmer Report calling them out every time they hype a false narrative. I don't want to take major media outlets down. I want to force them to grow up.

It's not about revenge. I won anyway. I'm still here. I have the respect of all of you. And the media is mostly afraid to lie about me these days. I just want to force the mainstream media to grow into something that I can trust and respect, so I can sleep at night as an American Anyway, we have four or five crucial days ahead of us as a country, and that's where I'm focused right now. But next week I'll start rolling out all kinds of plans for turning Palmer Report into a mainstream media outlet.

I've never built a mainstream media outlet before, so I'll have to ask you to bear with me as we build and grow. But I think that I, with all of your help, can turn Palmer Report into something truly special and invaluable in 2021.
