So in the past nearly year and seven months of Democrats holding the House and the Senate, we've gotten:

- The American Rescue Plan
- The Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act
- Bipartisan Safer Communities Act of 2022
- The PACT Act
- Chips Bill
- Inflation Reduction Act

All this productivity in terms of important legislation, half of it bipartisan, leads me to a question I've never gotten an answer to:

What would the Republicans do if they were in control of Congress? Specifically?

Don't give me meaningless phrases like "stop wokeness." What specifically would they do?

Ask them. They can't tell you.

What are their official policies? They don't have any. They no longer have a party platform.

They've had a long time now to complain about everything that the Democrats do and think about what they would do if they take over Congress.

But they haven't used it. They have nothing. No ideas. No policies. No plans.

Except ...

Kevin McCarthy promises that if the GOP takes the House, Marjorie Taylor Greene and Paul Gosar, who both spoke at white supremacist conferences this year, will not only get their committee assignments back but will get better ones. He promised.

Senator Rick Scott, whose job it is to make sure that the Republicans win the Senate, put out a written plan - the only one I know of by Republicans - promising that everyone will pay taxes. Which presumably includes seniors with little to no income. Who'd get a tax increase.

Senator Ron Johnson has talked about changing Social Security and Medicare so that it would have to be approved ongoingly on an annual basis.

But what would they do to HELP Americans?

I don't know.

You don't know.

They don't know.

Think about Obamacare. The Republicans went on a ten year crusade to repeal and replace it.

Replace it with WHAT?

They never came up with anything. Not even after ten years.

They're not, as a group, really into doing anything. Not their thing.
