If anti-democracy people are elected to literally run elections, they’re logically going to use that power to undermine democracy: more red tape, harder access to the polls, and possibly forcing people to re-register to vote.

.@ZachMontellaro doesn’t get into this but on the local level, depending on rules & jurisdiction, anti-democracy local election admins could change tech used, reduce polling locations/hours, change language accessibility, refuse to certify results, enable bad actors, & more.
