Twitter Thread by Rudy Havenstein, listening to Nas all day.

Rudy Havenstein, listening to Nas all day.
@RudyHavenstein

I hate when I learn something new (to me) & stunning about the Jeff Epstein network (h/t MoodyKnowsNada.)

Where to begin?

So our new Secretary of State Anthony Blinken's stepfather, Samuel Pisar, was "longtime lawyer and confidant of...Robert Maxwell," Ghislaine Maxwell's Dad.

"Pisar was one of the last people to speak to Maxwell, by phone, probably an hour before the chairman of Mirror Group Newspapers fell off his luxury yacht the Lady Ghislaine on 5 November, 1991." https://t.co/DAEgchNyTP

OK, so that's just a coincidence. Moving on, Anthony Blinken "attended the prestigious Dalton School in New York City"...wait, what? https://t.co/DnE6AvHmJg

Dalton School...Dalton School...rings a bell

https://t.co/UCPK3Ks1C4

Oh that's right.

The dad of the U.S. Attorney General under both George W. Bush & Donald Trump, William Barr, was headmaster of the Dalton School.

Donald Barr was also quite a writer.

https://t.co/ZEHinpMwSC

> Donald Barr had a way with words. pic.twitter.com/JdRBwXPhJn
>
> — Rudy Havenstein, listening to Nas all day. (@RudyHavenstein) September 17, 2020

I'm not going to even mention that Blinken's stepdad Sam Pisar's name was in Epstein's "black book."

Lots of names in that book. I mean, for example, Cuomo, Trump, Clinton, Prince Andrew, Bill Cosby, Woody Allen - all in that book, and their reputations are spotless.

How to tell the Ghouls from the Girls, an extensive report from us to you.

Rests in peace in a coffin.

Has nice hands—in a box!

Has a pet named Yorick.

She likes Nitro martinis.

HOW TO SPOT A VAMPIRE

by Baron Von Monster

IF SHE KEEPS HER NAILS LONG AND LOOKS TOO LONG AT YOUR THROAT, look out Jack, she's a sucker. She may like to scratch your head with a hand, but the hand ain't her own or maybe her big passion isn't martinis but Transylvania Flips. The aforementioned is made with a dash of spider feet, half a web (is better than none) and a little nitro. These are the little things you have to watch, cause you can't tell a Vampire from a girl without this score-card.

Preferring a coffin instead of a Murphy bed is another tip-off. And if she's afraid of stakes but likes steaks rare, watch that girl! We hope this helps to tell the ghouls from the girls, but if it doesn't, drop over some night for a cup of blood and we'll talk it over again.

She looks like anyone else.

Thriller

For my French amigos:

"It was Samuel Pisar...who had played the intermediary between Epstein and the cabinet." [Google Translate]

https://t.co/RUwJUopIVy

Sorry. I've been referring to him as "Anthony."

It's Antony Blinken.

Samuel Pisar was the Maxwell family's "long-trusted attorney."

Based in Paris, Pisar "had become one of [Robert] Maxwell's few confidants and probably his closest business adviser. He had helped pave Maxwell's entry into Israel's business community."

https://t.co/CuwLnCmcK9

It does seem like Pisar and the family found Robert Maxwell's death very suspicious (like another death 28 years later).

But once more another call from Pisar had raised a familiar nagging concern that was always there at the back of Betty's mind. Pisar had again spoken to colleagues about the circumstances of Maxwell's death. There were just too many imponderables to leave them satisfied. Why had the police investigation of the yacht been so perfunctory? Why had a forensic team not been brought in to investigate? Why had officials in the Canaries been allowed to go unchallenged in their prejudgments that the death had been an accident? Why had the case been put in the hands of such a relatively inexperienced judge as Olivia? Why had the autopsy been held in a mortuary that did not have a backup laboratory, rather than conducted in the island's main Forensic Institute, where such facilities were available?

"Could it be that no one wanted a thorough investigation?"

I do find the claim that Maxwell's "long-trusted" attorney Pisar, "one of [Robert] Maxwell's few confidants and probably his closest business adviser," didn't know Robert was working for Mossad a bit of a stretch.

Why had not experienced detectives in Madrid been summoned? This was no ordinary person whose death was being investigated. This was a world-famous figure. Could it be that no one wanted a thorough investigation? For Pisar and his colleagues it was no secret that the Maxwell empire was financially struggling to survive. Had a decision been taken that it was best if he should be declared dead, ideally by his own hand so that the financial remains could be grabbed by whoever reached them first? Pisar knew that Maxwell had hired Kroll. He would not have done that unless he was fearful that powerful enemies were gathering to destroy him. But who were they? Pisar could not think beyond bankers. In spite of his close friendship with Maxwell, he had no inkling of his client's other secret life – as Israel's superspy.

So to summarize so far:

Our Secretary of State Antony Blinken went to the Dalton School, and his stepdad Samuel Pisar was tight with both Robert Maxwell, Ghislaine's dad and spy, & apparently Jeff Epstein (that French article above).

The "Rappaport" mentioned here would be Bruce Rappaport (#GIK).

https://t.co/YI9OciSUYE

#BCCI

Pisar is Blinken's stepdad, of course, not Blinken, but still...so many odd coincidences.

Rappaport had to reach out for assistance to someone in the United States. He sought advice from an exceptionally well-known French lawyer, Samuel Pisar, at a meeting in the Paris airport. Pisar, who also represented Sir James Goldsmith, Sir Robert Maxwell, and would later work with the ineffable Roger Tamraz on a BCCI bailout plan, recommended Lyn Nofziger and E. Robert Wallach. Rappaport immediately flew to