Immunization: an entry point for digital identity

ID2020 Follow
Mar 28, 2018 · 4 min read

With World Health Day around the corner on April 7th, we'd like to bring attention to the intersection of global health and digital identity, and specifically the opportunity for immunization rates to scale digital identity amongst the most hard-to-reach children.

Globally, an estimated 95% of children receive at least one dose of some vaccine. This number is staggering — no other public health intervention reaches more children and impacts more families.

Yet, despite this high initial contact rate, only 37% of children in the world's poorest countries are fully immunized, meaning that they receive their full course of recommended vaccines. Ultimately, many children are left without comprehensive protection and vulnerable

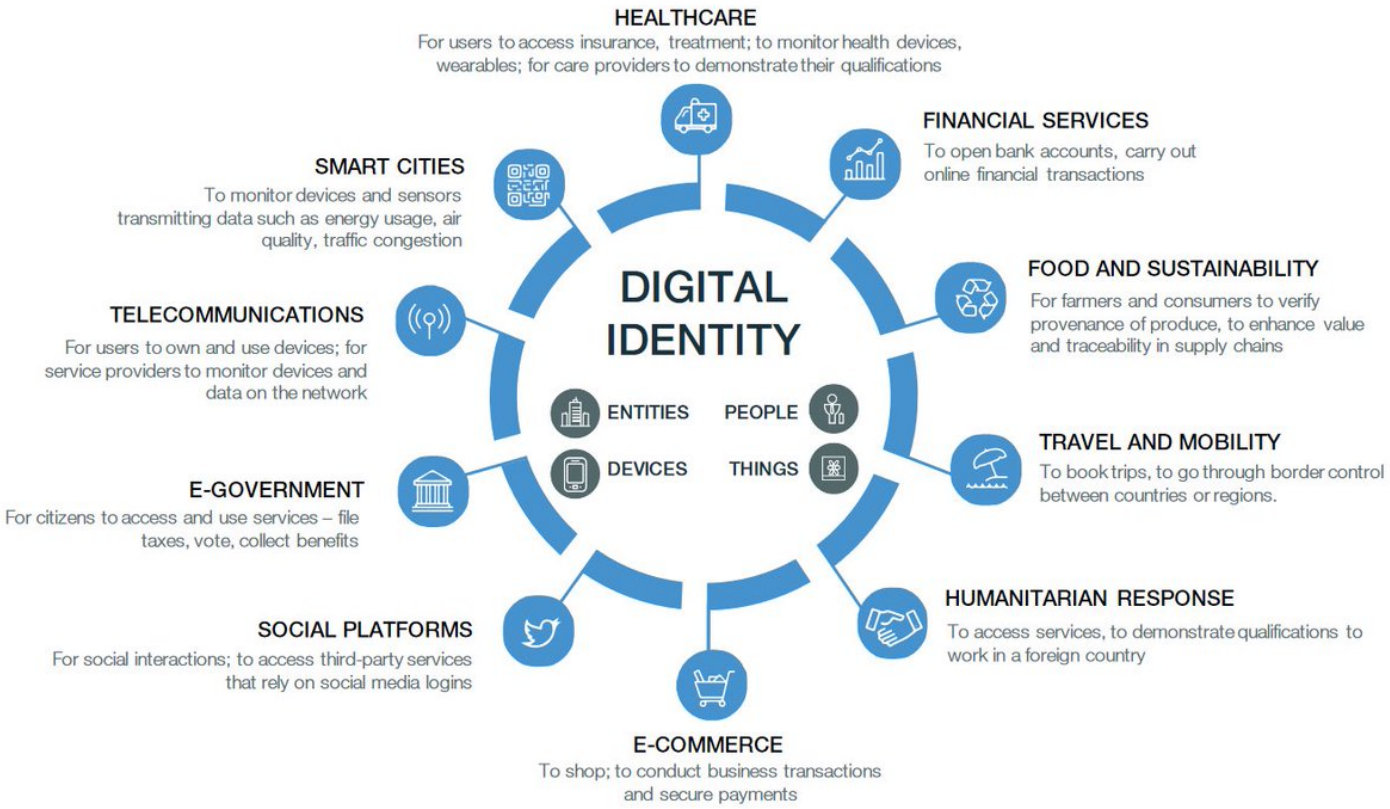

Now listen to Klaus talk about GAVI

How do so many “opportunities” just magically arise for these people? ■■■■■■■■■ https://t.co/3hZJqDmyfJ

A Global Call to Action

The Broadband Commission Manifesto calls on the global community to recognize digital connectivity as the foundational element of the United Nations 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. The Manifesto affirms the commitment of the Broadband Commission to mobilize efforts to achieve the 'Global Goal of Universal Connectivity' in support of the UN Secretary-General's Roadmap for Digital Cooperation and other connectivity initiatives.

'Building Back Better with Broadband' will help us accelerate progress towards the SDGs and re-energize the commitment of world leaders in this crucial Decade of Action. The time is now. This Broadband Commission's Manifesto is a rallying cry, calling for collaboration in:

That is why the UN COVID-19 team is working closely with Amir Dossal, former Executive Director of the United Nations Office for Partnerships, and Founder and President of the Global Partnerships Forum, to bring together businesses and entrepreneurs to find solutions to the current, fast-moving situation.

A 25-year UN veteran who has founded multiple UN offices and programmes, Dossal believes entrepreneurs should not only be asking themselves how they can help with COVID-19, but to see the importance of long-term sustainability through investing for impact. He stated that the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals offer a concrete roadmap for action. "The SDGs represent a $2 trillion annual investment opportunity, and a number of companies are examining their business models to orient their DNA around projects that advance the SDGs."

The ID2020 Alliance has launched a new digital identity program at its annual summit in New York, in collaboration with the Government of Bangladesh, vaccine alliance Gavi, and new partners in government, academia, and humanitarian relief.

The program to leverage immunization as an opportunity to establish digital identity was unveiled by ID2020 in partnership with the Bangladesh Government's Access to Information (a2i) Program, the Directorate General of Health Services, and Gavi, according to the announcement.

WTTC and World Economic Forum partner to share information and promote biometric travel

The World Travel & Tourism Council (WTTC) and the World Economic Forum (WEF) have announced a collaboration and information exchanging agreement to shape the future of travel with biometric-enabled digital traveler identity management throughout the travel and tourism sector.

The pilot consortium for the WEF's "Known Traveler Digital Identity" (KTDI) project launched this week, and the project was recently launched for internal testing. WTTC, meanwhile, says it has been researching more than 53 initiatives using biometrics in the sector and has identified potential emerging models, such as the KTDI, which could serve the traveler journey end-to-end. The KTDI project is expected to be trialed end-to-end for the air travel portion of journeys in 2020.

WTTC President and CEO Gloria Guevara pointed out that travel and tourism contribute more than 10 percent of GDP and 319 million jobs to the global economy, and 100 million jobs will be created in the sector over the next decade, or one in every five new jobs.

"Not only will we need to do things differently – as we cannot expect a near-doubling of airport capacity in the next 20 years – but we will need to do things right," notes Guevara. "The key, therefore, is to maximize the growth in a way that ensures safe and hassle-free travel by using biometric technology. "The range of work across the sector is welcome but demonstrates the unfortunate fragmentation and complexity. The challenge is to align ourselves – in the way we are announcing today – so that all parts of the sector work on same standards and make sure the different solutions can work together and successfully achieve "interoperability" so that a traveler can move seamlessly from one part of their journey to another using biometric technology."
