■ 7 practical ways to write copy that converts:

1/ Get specific

Landing page copy is full of unfalsifiable, blanket claims: “more, easier, faster ...”

If you want to stand out get specific. You can’t bullshit specifics:

The image shows a comparison between two versions of a landing page for ProsperOps. The left version is marked with a red 'X' and the right version with a green checkmark. A green arrow points from the left to the right.

ProsperOps

Save more on your
AWS EC2 bill.

24x7 autonomous RI management while giving you time back, peace of mind, and the flexibility to change EC2 instance types anytime.

Right Version (Green Checkmark):

ProsperOps

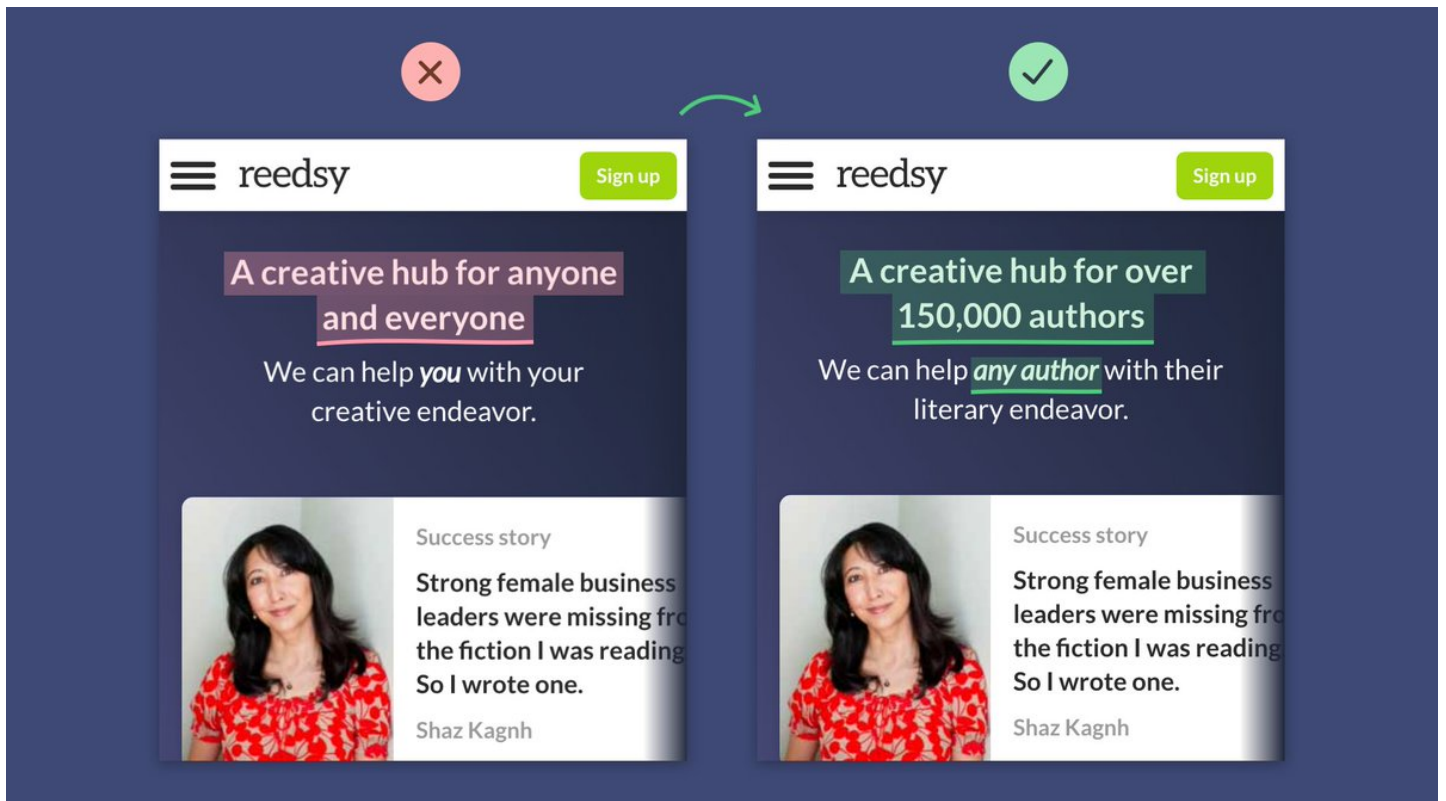

Save an average of
33.7% on your AWS
EC2 bill.

24x7 autonomous RI management while giving you time back, peace of mind, and the flexibility to change EC2

2/ Call out the type of customer you serve

People pay attention when they know something is specifically for them:

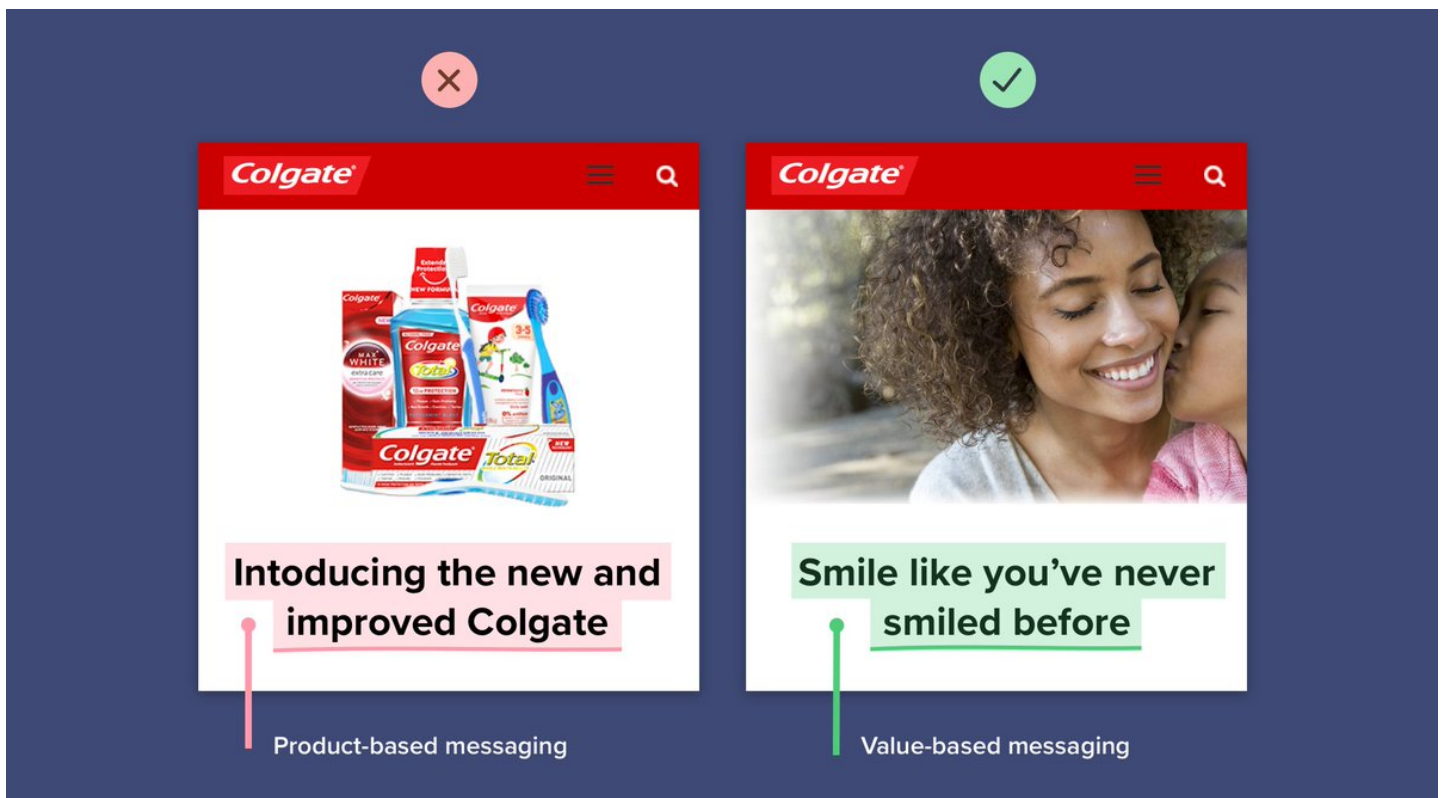

“What? Loads of authors are using this. I’m an author. Maybe I should be too ...”

3/ Use value-based messaging

Talk less about your product and more about the value your product brings.

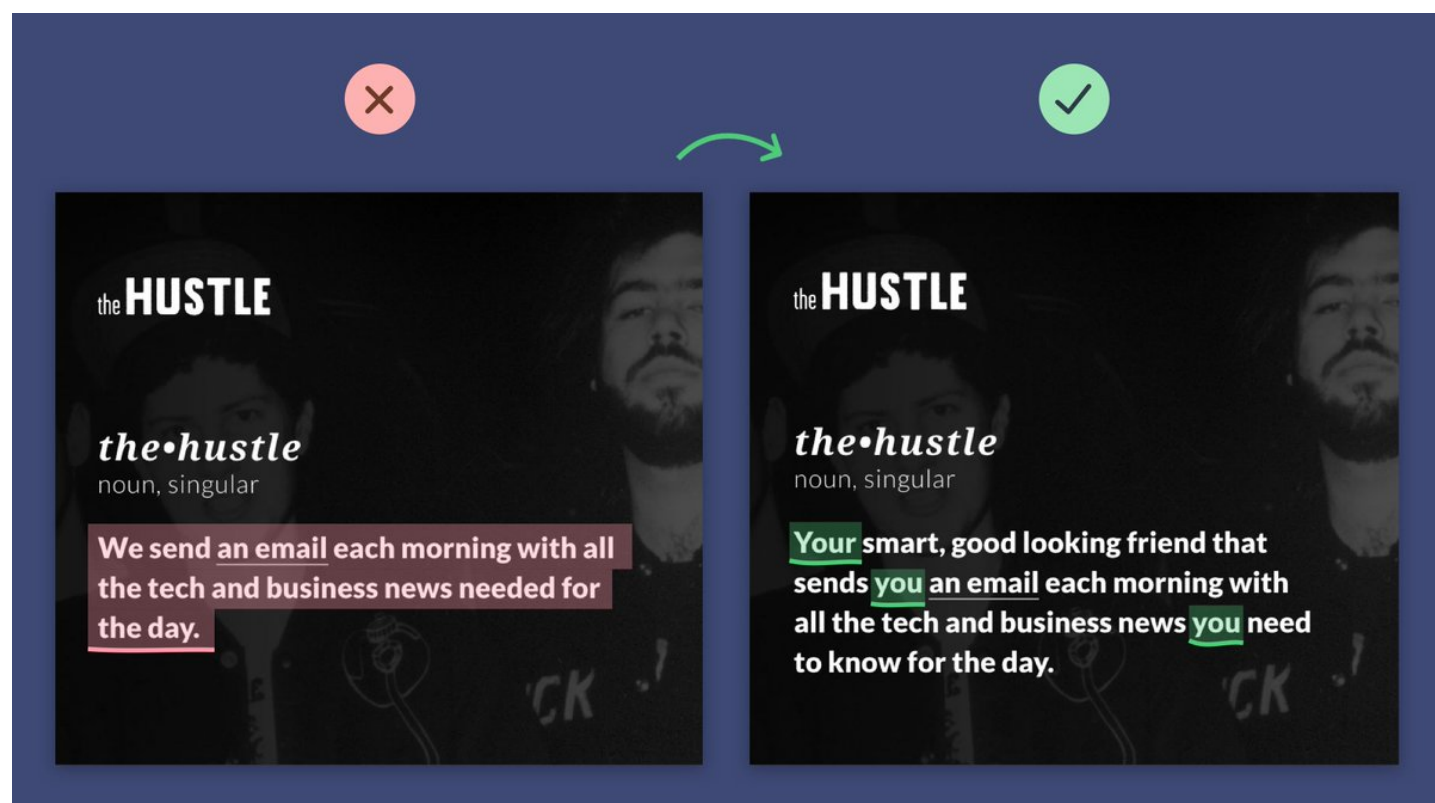

People don't want a better toothbrush. They want a brighter smile:

4/ Write for one reader

You're not talking to 1000 people. You're talking to the single person reading your page. So write like it.

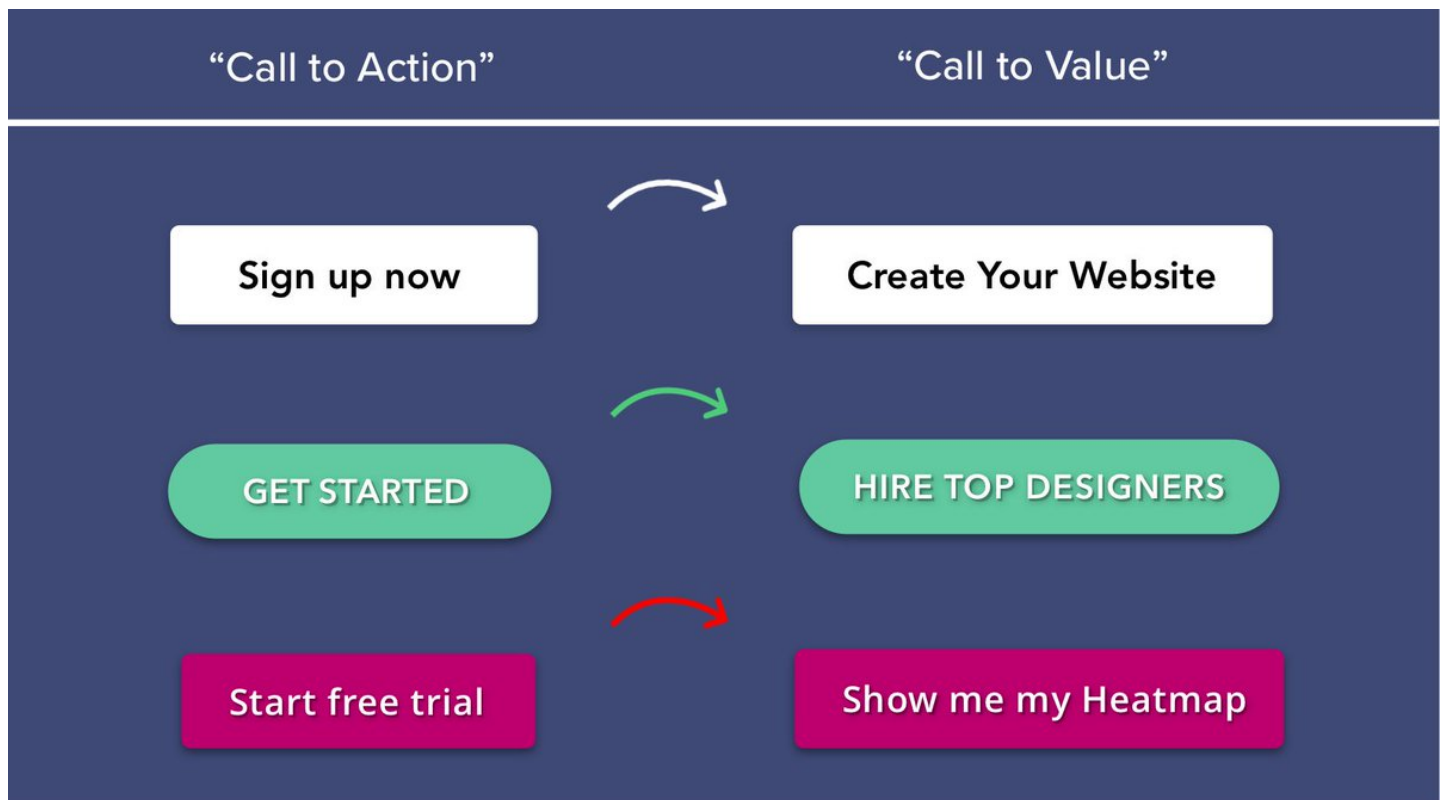

An informal tone and addressing your users personally ("you") makes a big difference:

5/ Think "Call-to-value" not "Call-to-action"

Buttons which amplify "value" over "action" usually perform better.

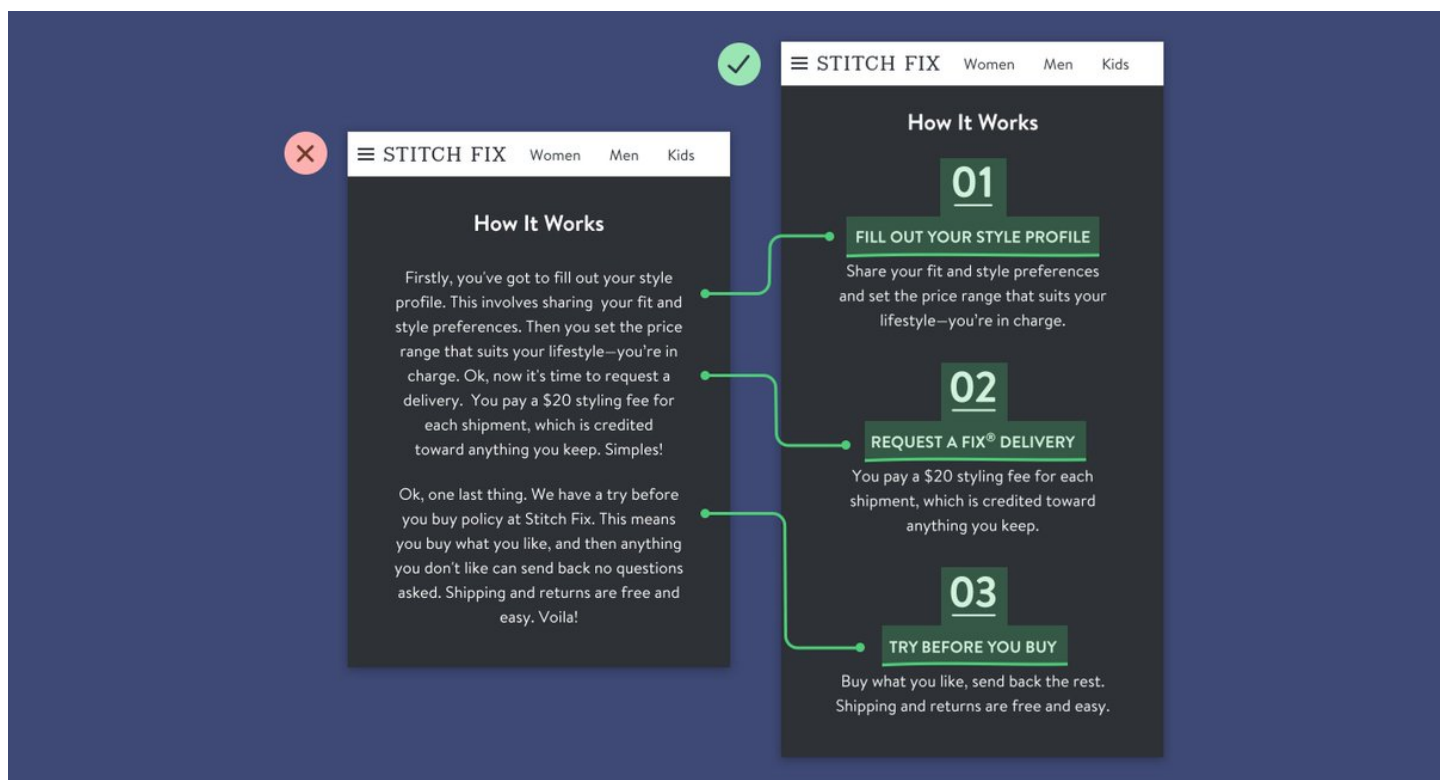

"Create Your Website" is more enticing than "Sign up now":

6/ Break long blocks of text into appetising chunks

Better converting copy is as much about repackaging as it is rewriting.

The 2019 human mind prefers “3 simple steps” to “two long paragraphs”:

7/ Use your customers' voice

Compare the feature page of Etsy and Amazon Handmade (two competitors in the handcrafted e-commerce space).

Etsy's voice reflects their customers independence, creativity and imagination. Amazon's voice sounds like their accounts department:

✗ Amazon Handmade

Artisan only

We have an Artisan application and audit process to ensure we're building a shop of genuinely handcrafted goods.

No hidden fees

Joining Handmade, creating your shop, and listing products is free. When you make a sale, Handmade will deduct a 12% referral fee.

Custom Profile

Your Artisan profile has a custom URL to make it easy for Customers to find your shop.

✓ Etsy

A one-of-a-kind community

Etsy is a global online marketplace, where people come together to make, sell, buy and collect unique items.
