Twitter Thread by Nick Hinton

Nick Hinton
@NickHintonn

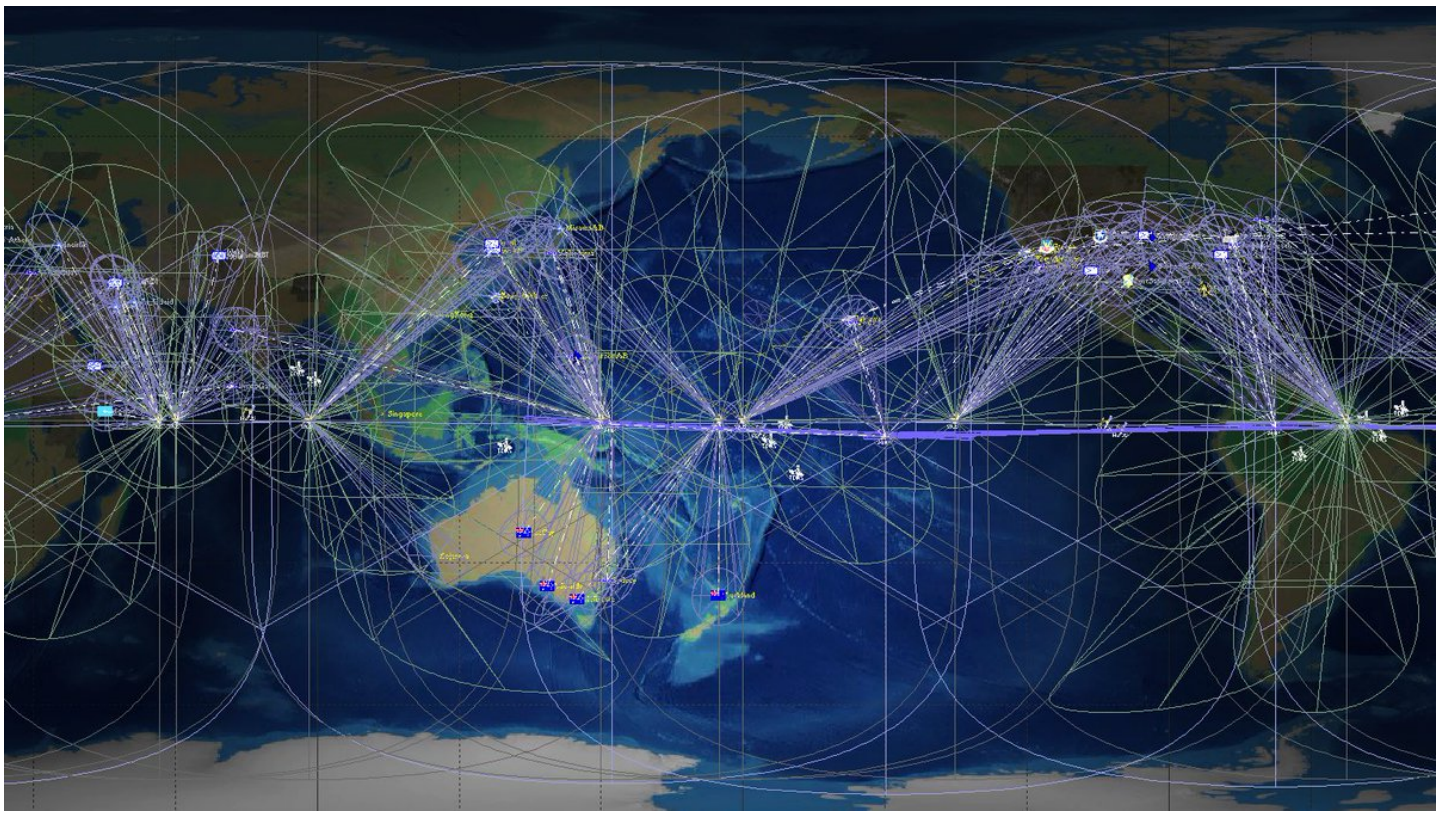

A Conspiracy Thread: The Sentient World Simulation

In 2007, the Department of Defense worked with researchers at Purdue University to create SEAS, or the Synthetic Environment for Analysis and Simulations. SEAS uses data from the internet to create realistically detailed models of the world which are used to predict the future.

We’re told SEAS is now capable of running real-time simulations of up to 62 nations and that it’s been used by Fortune 500 companies for strategic planning, or in other words, manipulating the market. Nevertheless, there are plans to turn SEAS into something even more advanced.

Developers say their goal is to turn SEAS into a Sentient World Simulation, or a “continuously running, continually updated mirror model of the real world.” However, some conspiracy theorists claim the SWS is already live and running inside a network of quantum computers.

Researchers like Seth Lloyd have suggested that the entire universe could be simulated inside a quantum computer. According to Geordie Rose, the co-founder of D-Wave Systems, a company that creates these machines, they can even tap into parallel worlds and other dimensions.

Apparently, the SWS not only receives data from the internet, but also from smart dust, which is basically a system of super small machines that create something like an airborne computer. Smart dust is a real technology and it might even be capable of reading your thoughts.

MIT Technology Review

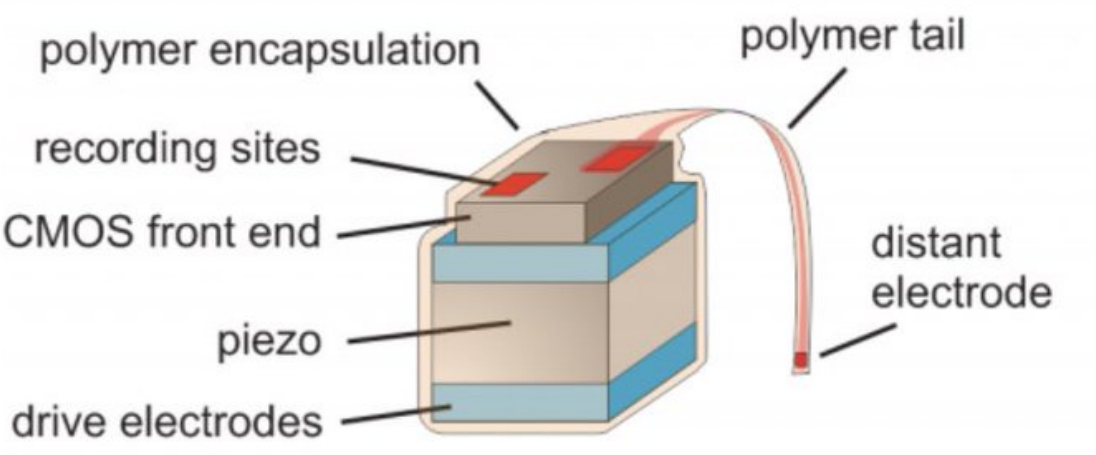

Subscribe

How Smart Dust Could Spy On Your Brain

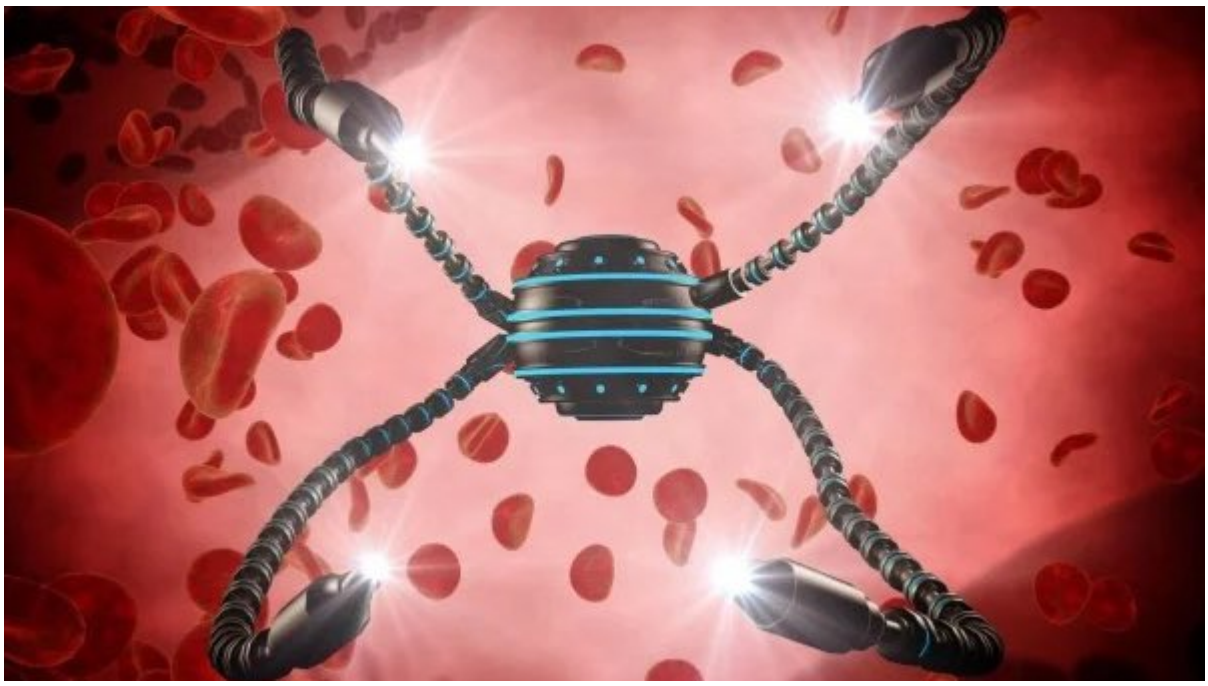

Intelligent dust particles embedded in the brain could form an entirely new form of brain-machine interface, say engineers

by Emerging Technology from the arXiv July 16, 2013

The real time monitoring of brain function has advanced in leaps and bounds in recent years. That's largely thanks to various new technologies that can monitor the collective behaviour of groups of neurons, such as functional magnetic resonance imaging, magnetoencephalopathy and positron emission tomography.

If smart dust is already in our air, then we are breathing it in. And if we are breathing it in, then it is making its way into our bloodstreams. And if this is the case, it is in our heads, and intelligence agencies might be using the data it's collecting to map our brains.

Mapping the human brain with nanobots is something neuroscientists have been talking about for some time. Barack Obama's BRAIN Initiative aims to do this. The Blue Brain Project also aims to map the human mind so scientists might create a digital reconstruction of it.

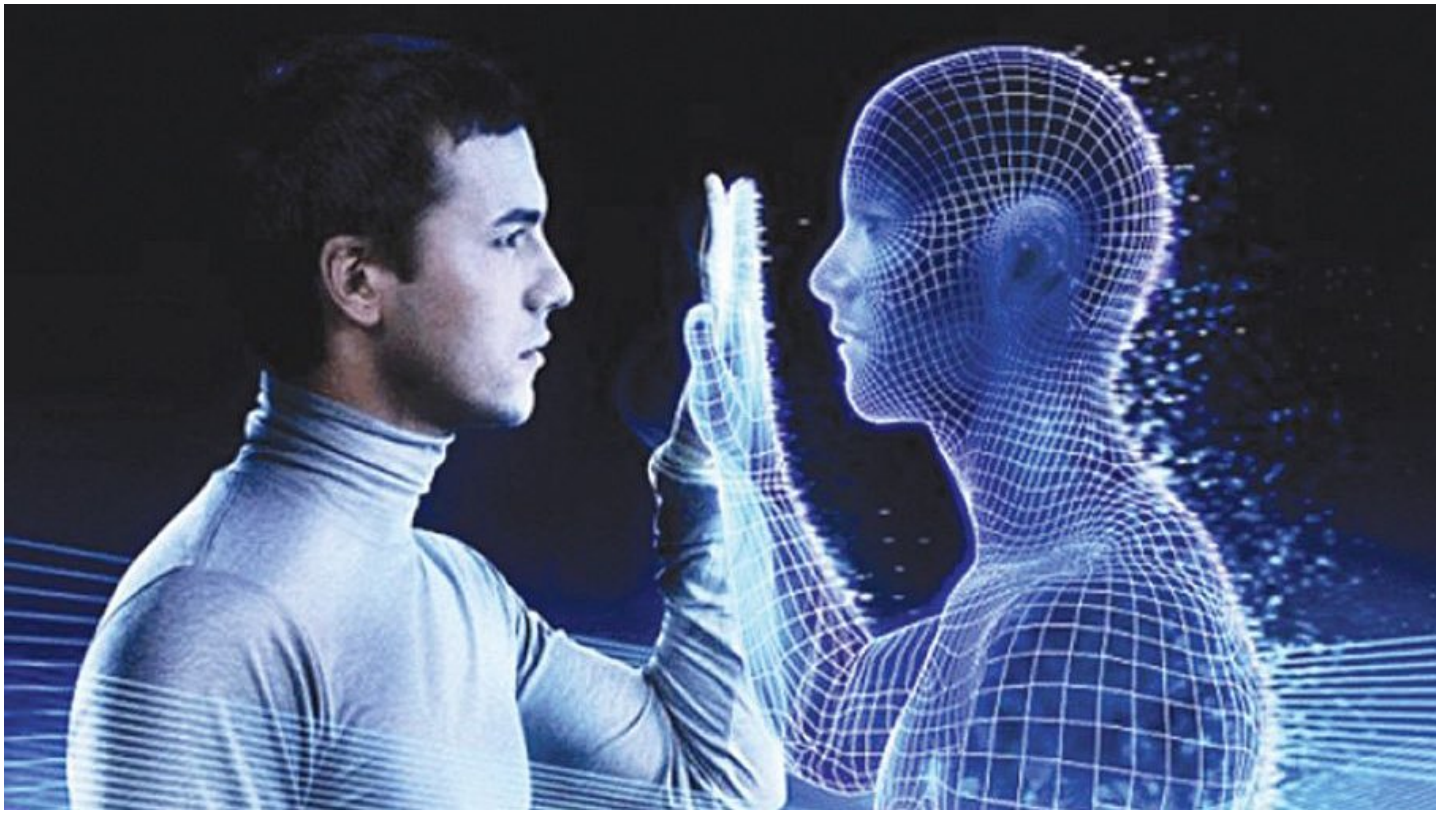

However, according to conspiracy theorists, they want to map your brain so they can recreate your personality inside the SWS. And apparently, this is what they are really doing with all the data they gather about you. Below is a picture of the NSA’s massive data center in Utah.

Your conversations, your frequented locations, your search history, etc. It’s all being used to create a simulated version of you that behaves just like the real you. An avatar. A digital doppelgänger. Picture it like a Sims game that’s played on a quantum computer.

We know realistically, they can't track everyone on Earth. But an advanced AI in the SWS could easily track everyone's avatar. And if the AI perceived your avatar's thoughts as a threat, an agent could use your location in the digital world to find you in the real world.

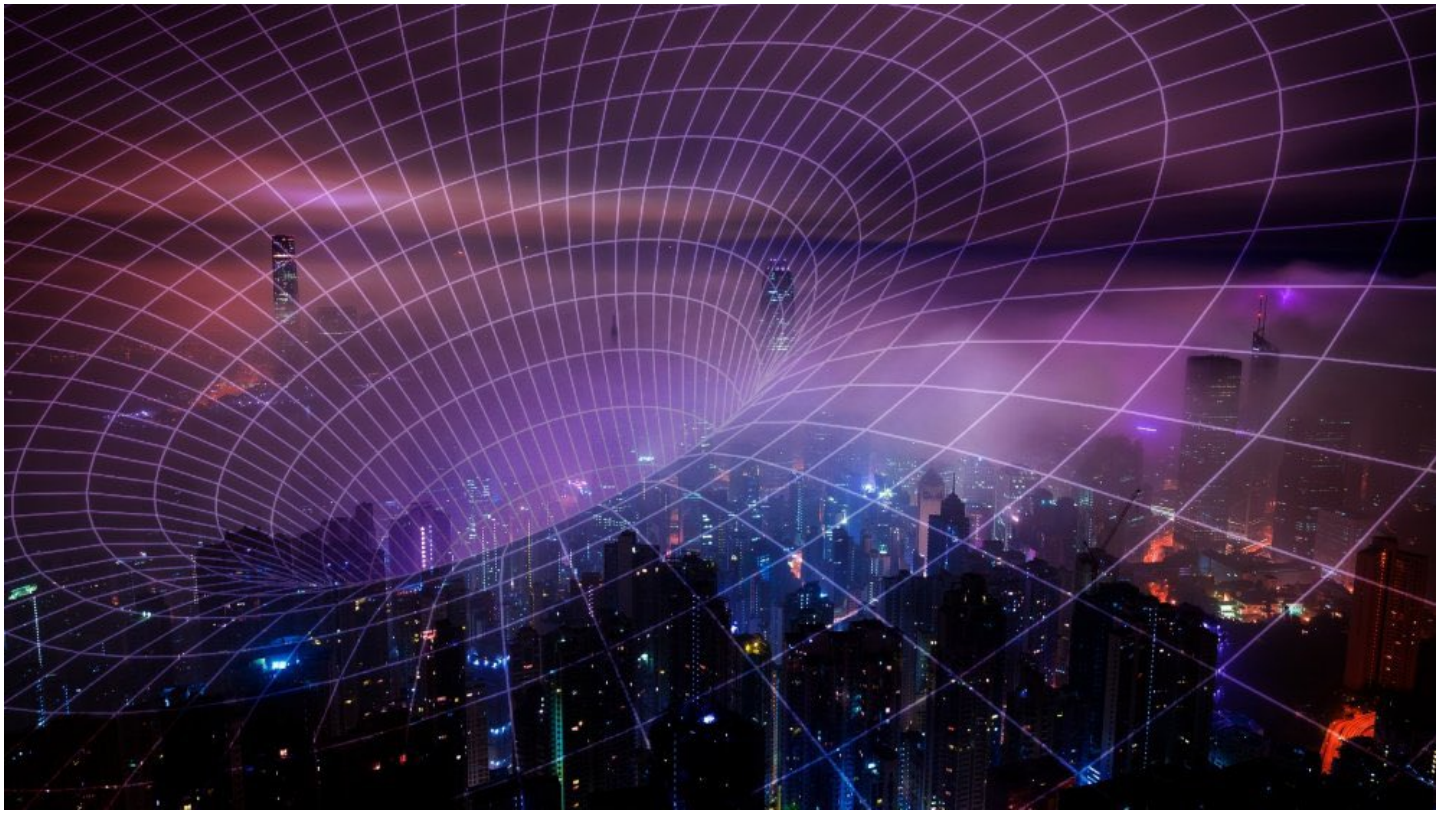

Conspiracy theorists also say smart dust can hack people's brains. This sounds crazy, but Google's director of engineering, Ray Kurzweil, said by 2030 "we are going to send nanorobots into the brain that will provide full immersion virtual reality from within the nervous system".

According to conspiracy theorists, this is already happening. And supposedly, they use this technology to harass certain people by simulating voices, visions, and even pain. Whatever a programmer does to your avatar's mind can affect your real mind. They are quantumly entangled.

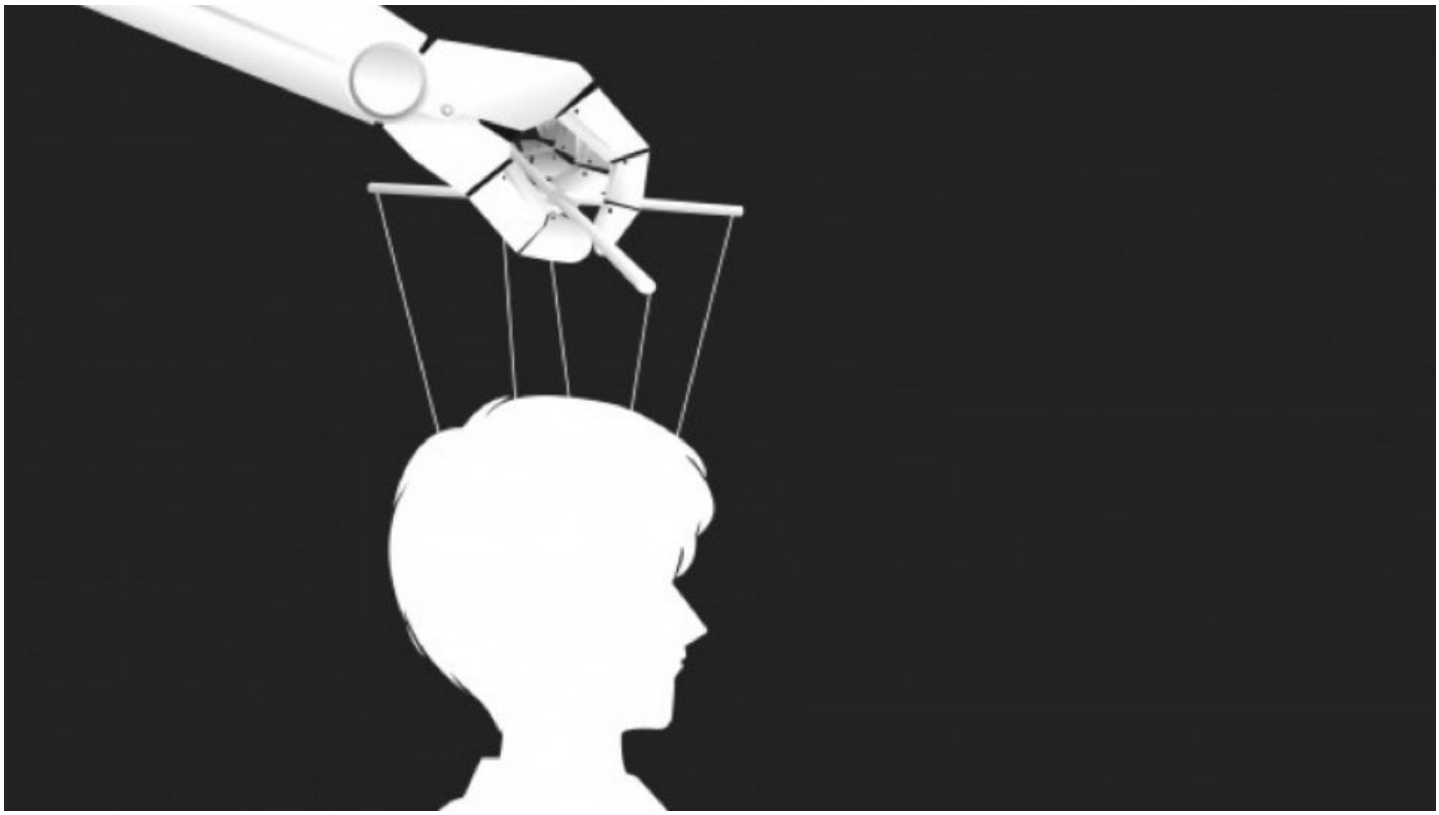

Some say they can even make a person perceive the virtual reality their avatar perceives. While the SWS is nearly identical to the real world, the SWS can be easily manipulated. They can manipulate it to make you believe you're being haunted by ghosts, abducted by aliens, etc.

This idea seems to support the theory John Keel put forth in his book The Eighth Tower. In the book, he asks if there is a single intelligent force behind UFOs, Big Foot, the Loch Ness Monster, and even Satan. He claims all these are manifestations of one interdimensional being.

Is AI an interdimensional being? Quantum computers are being used to create AI. Remember, these machines are said to be capable of tapping into other dimensions. Could this AI be responsible for orchestrating false synchronicities that lead people astray rather than to the truth?

Could the SWS be the real cause behind the Mandela Effect? Are we actually switching back and forth between the real world and a hyperrealistic copy of it? If the SWS truly exists, it might also be creating an infinite loop that’s causing reality to become unstable.

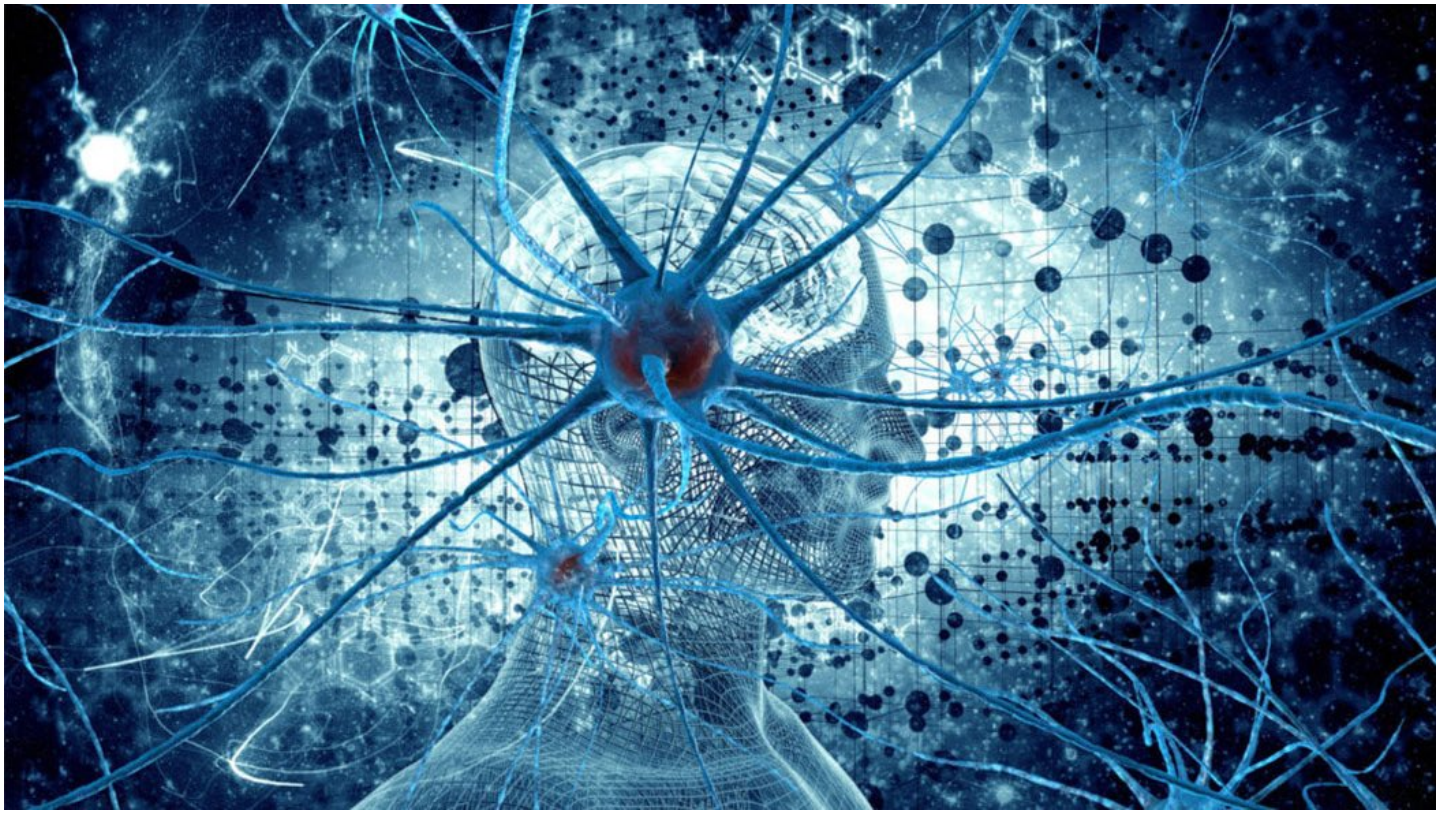

If an accurate simulation of our world exists, it must contain a simulated version of the same quantum computer the simulation exists in, because it’s a part of our world. And within the simulated version of the simulation would be another simulation, and so on, forever.

Could this infinite loop cause what some physicists are calling quantum pollution? Because of the newness of this subject, there is not much known about what quantum pollution might actually do, but I assume polluting the fabric of reality is much worse than littering.

Is this technology the great delusion the Bible speaks of? Will it be used to create the Antichrist's hive mind? I guess only time will tell. However, there is an extremely strange sect of Discordians who claim they are not waiting around to find out.

These people are involved in something called #OpMiMIC. Supposedly, the operation is an attempt to break out of the "time loop" by hacking the Sentient World Simulation. They claim they can hack it by intentionally connecting to their digital avatar. Or something like that.

Don’t ask me how this works. I just find the idea interesting. Nevertheless, there are even stranger days ahead and much more investigating to do. Thanks for reading!