

Twitter Thread by Chxta

Chxta

@Chxta

Here is the thing about these 2015 conversations that many appear to have refused to move on from.

They should be a teachable moment. Sadly, aren't asking the right asks. Too many people from my neck of the woods (SE/SS) keep insisting on narratives that won't stand scrutiny.

I'll speak for the Igbo side, we are letting ourselves down in what should be a race to advance our agenda within #Nigeria
<https://t.co/LXAYggXZEf>

Yes, it is undeniable that there was an element of ethnic chauvinism in the coalition that came together against GEJ, but to attribute his loss simply to that factor is to completely miss the lessons of 2015, and as a result, set yourself up for another failure.

I'll talk about two of these:

First, Benue. In 2015, Benue state voted for Buhari.

No one within the set of people who keep shouting about ethnic jingoism ever seems to ask themselves why.

There are/were two reasons: first, Gabriel Suswam's government was unbelievably bad.

As of January 2015, Benue owed workers almost a year in salaries, and he never got as much as a reprimand from Abuja.

Instead, Suswam was molycoddled by the GEJ govt.

Then there was the herdsmen matter, which was in Benue especially, already a crisis that culminated in the governor being shot at in 2014.

<https://t.co/bDkC2QLy4r>

Terror in Nigeria\u2019s Food Basket \u2013 A report on the violence in the Middle\u2011Belt <https://t.co/hadralzy2Wpic.twitter.com/KmKdl19q52>

— SBM Intelligence (@sbmintelligence) October 20, 2015

Many people looked at those, then looked at the alternative, and decided (wrongly in hindsight but that is another matter), that the alternative served their interests better.

Benue people were fed up, and the 2015 vote, which was close for the record, was a major protest.

I've not even talked about David Mark and how his very longevity and perceived detachment came to be a problem for the PDP in his senatorial district.

To now reduce those decisions to the effects of "an ethnically driven PR campaign" is to do the Benue people a disservice.

But the bigger disservice is to the South-West geopolitical region.

Many of the people who shout about an ethnically driven agenda by Yoruba people against GEJ have probably never taken a look at Nigeria's voting patterns, at least since 1979.

For all their faults, and there are many, accusing the SW as a bloc of pursuing an ethnic agenda in national elections doesn't really stand up to scrutiny.

Persisting with this accusation risks alienating people we should be having more constructive engagements with.

FTR, I have looked at the numbers for all the elections since 1999 (no 2007), and the SW, in actuality, always has the biggest split of #Nigeria's GPZs.

The only time they came close to voting as a bloc was in 1999.

The pic below shows the breakdown of votes by GPZ in 2015.

	A	B	C	D	E	F	G	H	I	J
1	State	GPZ	Buhari	Jonathan		State	GPZ	Buhari	Jonathan
2	Benue	NC	373,961	303,737		Abia	SE	13,394	368,303
3	Kogi	NC	264,851	149,987		Anambra	SE	17,926	660,762
4	Kwara	NC	302,146	132,602		Ebonyi	SE	19,518	323,653
5	Nassarawa	NC	236,838	273,460		Enugu	SE	14,157	553,003
6	Niger	NC	657,678	149,222		Imo	SE	133,253	559,185
7	Plateau	NC	429,140	549,615				198,248	2,464,906
8	FCT	NC	146,399	157,195
9			2,411,013	1,715,818		Akwa Ibom	SS	58,411	953,304
10						Bayelsa	SS	5,194	361,209
11	Adamawa	NE	374,701	251,664		Cross River	SS	28,368	414,863
12	Bauchi	NE	931,598	86,085		Delta	SS	48,910	1,211,405
13	Borno	NE	473,543	25,640		Edo	SS	208,469	286,869
14	Gombe	NE	361,245	96,873		Rivers	SS	69,238	1,487,075
15	Taraba	NE	261,326	310,800				418,590	4,714,725
16	Yobe	NE	446,265	25,526
17			2,848,678	796,588		Ekiti	SW	120,331	176,466
18						Lagos	SW	792,460	632,327
19	Jigawa	NW	885,988	142,904		Ogun	SW	308,290	207,950
20	Kaduna	NW	1,127,760	484,085		Ondo	SW	299,889	251,368
21	Kano	NW	1,903,999	215,779		Osun	SW	383,603	249,929
22	Katsina	NW	1,345,441	98,937		Oyo	SW	528,620	303,376
23	Kebbi	NW	567,883	100,972				2,433,193	1,821,416
24	Sokoto	NW	671,926	152,199
25	Zamfara	NW	612,202	144,833
26			7,115,199	1,339,709
27

Interestingly, it was the South-West and the North-Central that coincidentally had similar split voting patterns, which speaks to regions where the ruling elite do not dictate to the generality of the population.

Both the NC and the SW had voting ratios of 4:3 in favour of Buhari back in 2015.

The corresponding ratios for the SE and SS were 13:1 and 11:1 in favour of Goodluck Jonathan, while for the NE and NW, the ratios were 7:2 and 5:1 in favour of Buhari.

This indicates a strong herd mentality in the latter four regions, but even worse in the SE and SS.

Shouldn't it be something we honestly want to discuss amongst ourselves? A herd mentality eventually breeds a messiah.

FTR, this pattern has repeated itself since 1999.

Being from that area, I know that a herd mentality is the last thing people have there, so what it tells me is that there is something more untoward going on, and people need to ask themselves why that mechanism failed in 2015, but that is not the main thrust of this thread...

In June 2016, I wrote about the emergence of a Mason-Dixon line in #Nigeria and pointed out that for the foreseeable future, at least electorally, the NE/NW will be diametrically opposed to the SE/SS.

<https://t.co/uJCOq0v1JT>

1/ As is becoming habit, the complete thing is here, for those who can sit and read: <https://t.co/jTgkZ6NGvZ>

— Chxta (@Chxta) June 20, 2016

These two regional blocs (SE/SS & NE/NW) are geographically contiguous within themselves, so it is not surprising.

Neither is it a bad thing to have opposed interests. It is how to bring those interests together that counts, and this is where my people are dropping the ball.

It is clear, following the disaster that Buhari has been, that the interests of the SE/SS are aligned with those of the NC and the SW, #Nigeria's swing regions.

This is where wise politicking comes in.

How do we, without the emotional blackmail of accusing people of a tribalism that does not really stand up to scrutiny, make the alliances that we need to advance our interests?

We, for example, have the common interest of weakening Abuja.

For the Igbo people of #Nigeria, I believe that our interests are best served if we have an alliance with the South-West.

With the South-South we already have a relationship that is both fractious and familial. We have to manage it properly.

With the SW, what nd■ Igbo need is an alliance, one that is defined by our interests.

We have been hurt by the poor Buhari economy.

The Buhari economy has also hurt the SW, and even though many won't admit it, their treatment by the North has also hurt their pride.

Unfortunately, too many of our people have remained emotional in this matter, and are choosing to focus on, once again, an ethnic angle that at best does not stand up to scrutiny, and at worst, only a percentage of the South-West is guilty of.

Do we have to love the South-West to make an alliance with them?

No.

Do we have to trust the South-West to make an alliance with them?

No.

We have to focus on our group interest, which is for the short to medium term at least, aligned with theirs, how to get the greatest number of our people out of poverty and into prosperity.

Given that the SW clearly has differing, and in many cases, opposed factions none of whom is dominant as the numbers show, how can we rather than antagonise them, work with them to advance the interest of the Igbo man, which is to have a growing economy in which to sell market?