Twitter Thread by Amrit

Amrit @funandflight

Kangana's malady: An acute case of a right wing afflicted

==========

I really feel sad for this lady. But it exposes a critical problem of a right wing mind. Of a life lived comparing.

Since she is in arts field. Let's take music which has distinct classes of music e.g. Western classic or Hindustani/Carnatic Classical. A virtuoso in any one of these music forms will not seek to denigrate or compare one art against another. Actually, a good classical artiste won't even denigrate folk music. It is equally as hard to compose a great bhakti poetry as it is to compose a spiritual shloka. One can find something mystical in both.

Art is really about losing oneself - An exploration melting into knowledge and finally into empathy and union. As you grow in an art form, you lose your identity even as humility grows.

You start seeing beauty all around. A great saint in one religion sees greatness in another religion too. Such a person is indeed a virtuoso.
The problem with a right wing mind is that it needs control and a sense of power. They resemble the angry executives who populate our corporate office hiding their incompetence behind arrogance and anger. That's the cowardice that Mohua Moitra talks about. They compare, compete, denigrate others (Meryl Streep, Tom Cruise) and then create their own competition field (Padma Award) and in the worst case may be compete against self (Thalaivi or Dhakkad). It is almost as though they never grew out of their nursery class: If I ran a race, I need to get a first prize! If you don't get the reward, you start seeing conspiracy around you "SSR was murdered," "Karan Johar is a villian," Hindus are being targeted."

The pathetic part is that such mind also plays a paradoxical trick on itself. It somehow switches from anger/frustration to an improbable godly sermon too to build a community around their sermons "I am Atmanirbhar and not dependent on charity.

I pay my taxes. I love my country, my religion, myself and am an optimist. I feel sad for critical people like you who are always trying to pull us down." You pull yourself down to award onself and then you abuse those critiquing as negative people to enlist a group of supporter

I don't know when this mental illness will end. In my view, these mad pepple will come to their senses after all of us are razed to the ground. Insanity of this kind has no cure. Imagine the craziness of these people going to Koo and spending all their time abusing the guys on Twitter for not recognising their greatness and then speak about how optimistic they are in greating a great nation. //Tweeting about it, she wrote: "Anyone who is asking how many oscars I have can also ask how many national or Padma awards Meryl Streep has, answer is none, come out of your slave mentality. High time you all find some self respect and self worth."//

@KaunAurat @OManojKumar @medusaflower