holy shit the journalist girl in love with martin shkreli is on clubhouse and the story just keeps going.

"So who's the villain in this story?" these mods are so being so gentle and diplomatic.

"Do you feel like you've been manipulated?" "No. (laughing)"

A gentle question/inquiry about how she feels after losing so much in this process, and she replies saying that it was hard, but she has no regrets, and says that without it she would not have had her eyes opened to how bad the criminal justice & prison system is

Thank god for the woman who is zeroing in on the details of the exact ways he was manipulating her by saying that he had anxiety & panic attacks too (telling her what she wants to hear, mirroring her personal wounds so he can bond with her over them)

Oh my god not some guy derailing the entire room by trying to make the conversation about CLUBHOUSE and asking her how she found the app, who invited her, if she's had a welcome room yet. dl;skadlaksds

"Do you think you would have fallen in love with him if you met under different circumstances?" She says yes, absolutely, if she knew about his self-taught bio-engineering(?) and 'mastery of small subjects'(???)

i wish the best for my ex husband, i hope he goes out there and [pause, laugh cough] lives his best life. anyway, Martin was the beginning of cancel culture, and he even offered to cure COVID pro-bono but he's.. in prison.....

MODS ASLEEP, TIME TO ASK THE REAL QUESTIONS. LET'S GOOOOO

wow. what was that mess

(everyone is talking over each other)

What I want to know: when she microwaved him a hamburger during visitation, did she take the buns off first or did she heat them with the patty?

"I DONT THINK THAT LOVING SOMEONE IS MISCONDUCT."

She says the good thing about sending more white people to jail is that it makes jail better for everyone by raising awareness about how bad things are. Last question was about chicken wings. Now the afterparty room is already going.

this is now going to become the standard move: twitter's main character du jour will go on clubhouse post-virality to stir up even more attention and drama. congrats, clubhouse is now jerry springer.
