A note points to the entrance to the Islamic Center in Hamburg, which is under German surveillance of internal security. According to the German secret service, the center is used by the Iranian regime to “export the revolution” and is known for its support for Lebanese militias.

When Asadi was questioned by German authorities, he defended himself by stating that he was just a tourist and that the places found in the big green book were tourist places that he had visited with his children.
but we must search about them.
