Admiralty Law (also known as Maritime Law) is a system of law originally codified by the Republic of Venice from the 11th Century and subsequently refined over subsequent centuries governing the operation, ownership of vessels on the oceans, transport and insurance of cargo, commerce, bills, navigation, liability, liens and finance.

Admiralty Law is the foundation of international law ultimately as "private law".

The word Maritime comes from the early 13th century combination of two Latin words mari (sea) and timeo (fear) meaning literally "Sea of Fear" or "Fear of the (Holy) See– an extremely off word to define a form of law of the seas. The formation of the private company owned by the Venetians through the Franciscans otherwise known as the Holy See was officially formed through a ceremony in 1250 between the head of the Franciscans Doge Giovanni Bernadone "Marco" Morosini (Moriconi) and Pope Innocent IV in a boat dedicated to "Satan" called a Bucentaur (beautiful centaur) near St Mark's Square's square when the Doge threw the Papal Ring into the sea during a formal Roman Cult religious ceremony at which point "St Francis" was the first to ever usher "Desponsamus te, mare, in signum veri perpetuique domini" We wed thee, sea, in the sign of the true and everlasting Lord") declared Venice and the (Holy) sea to be indissolubly one.

This renewal of "wedding vows" between the owners and masters of the Roman Catholic Church and its trustees still occurs every year.

The word Admiralty is also a 16th Century word formed by the Jesuit College of English and transmitted through the Shakespeare portfolio from two Latin words ad meaning "for the purpose of" and miratus/mirus meaning "to wonder at, be surprised at or something strange". Hence the literal original meaning of "admiralty law" is "law for the purpose of surprise, wonder and strangeness" or simply "occult law". Within the modern Roman Court system today, Maritime Law in ritual and function still exists:

(i) The accused is placed in a "dock" signifying them as being converted into a "vessel" at times and "goods" or property at other times; and (ii) The charges and evidence presented to the court is listed on a "docket" being a manifest of goods delivered, otherwise known as a Bill of Lading between a consignee and consignor that if no rejected or returned means commercially that the one who has received the goods being the accused or consignee is now liable for any draft bill; and (iii) The charges against the accused, sometimes called a respondent being another maritime term, are usually listed in what is called "Bill of Indictment" representing a draft bill for the "goods" being the charges listed on the "docket" delivered to the "vessel" being the accused. Given Maritime Law and Admiralty Law including all ritual is founded on fraud, organized crime, curses and corruption all such law is considered null and void from the beginning having no effect. http://one-heaven.org/canons_positive_law/article_3310.htm
