Twitter Thread by Gbenga Samuel-Wemimo

A wife cheated in a marriage and it was found out. The husband felt used and abused. After a long time of reflection, he decided to revenge

To repay cheating for cheating! He got online and started following hookups and chat rooms with sexual offerings

After sometime he got what he wanted, a sexual engagement with a lady online

They met at the hotel & he slept with the lady

In his mind, he had evened the score

Days after the deed, things started falling out of place for him

His conscience became heavy, he couldn't concentrate at work and he felt no peace

He experienced all the emotions that cheats and unfaithful people experience all the time that robs them of self-respect and human dignity

He had mortgaged his worth like Esau mortgaged his birthright

He couldn't confess the deed to his wife because he was certain it would make him look small and perhaps prompt her to cheat again While wallowing in his guilt, the lady he cheated with chatted him up

It felt like a sign to him
A sign to see her again and connect with her and unburden
He met with her again and she became his escape from reality him to put things in the wrong perspective

"Everybody cheats...

She helped

"You're wise to get yours...

"Live your life to please yourself...

"You never can tell what your partner is up to...

It was what he wanted to hear

Before he knew it, he spent less and less time at home with his wife because her sight made him feel guilty and to see himself for what he hed become

The wife suspected what was going on and would cry herself to sleep every night telling herself she caused it and it served her right

She cheated and had been told she was forgiven but the backlash was hard and hurtful.

She could decide to cheat again and claim her husband was cheating too but she didn't like how the first cheating experience made her feel

Being unfaithful changes you

Makes you feel hollow and empty and sad

Being cheated upon makes you feel rejected, unvalued and unloved

Neither of the two feelings were healthy

She fell into depression

Her husband didnt even notice or paid her any attention as she struggled to live

Eventually, her husband discovered that the lady he was cheating with was also cheating on him

He had come to expect faithfulness from her because it is innate to expect faithfulness from the one to whom you are committed he went to check her in the apartment he rented for her on a sunday morning and he found her having sex with another person

It broke him

The sinking feeling he had been dodging came back

He could run from it by cheating with another person and becoming a rabid dog or sit himself down and tell himself that path only leads deeper into the darkness

When Jesus told us not to repay evil with evil, He said so in our best interest

The man eventually returned home to God and confessed his misdeed

He asked for forgiveness and cried for restoration

The Holy Spirit heard him

The Holy Spirit said "I am a forgiving and healing spirit, you abandoned me when you pursued the course of the flesh in the name of getting even.

You lost

pace with me and lost ground in your walk with me"

When he got home, he confessed his sins to his wife and, apologized but it was almost too late

His wife had developed heart palpitation and high blood pressure

Emotional trauma had taken its hold on her body

The Holy Spirit

stepped in and healed this family but the experience left an indelible mark

The flesh might ask for a pound of flesh, when you yield to that demand you lose a part of yourself.

Often times you find people who allow their good character to be corrupted or negatively influenced by the bad behaviour or ill-treatment they receive from others. For instance, someone could decide to stop greeting a neighbour or a colleague, because each time he greets that neighbour or colleague, he or she doesn't answer. To make such a decision would mean that you're allowing someone's bad behaviour change your good character. Never allow that to happen to you.

That a friend or an acquaintance took undue advantage of your good behaviour is no justification for you to change for the worse. Maintain your good character. Keep on being the nice, loving and caring one; it will pay off. The question to ask before making a decision to change your good behaviour should be: "Was it right for me to do what I did?" If it was right, then you shouldn't change it because someone else doesn't like it Don't be moved by the negative actions

, comments or ill-treatments from others. Rather, respond in love to those who hurt or despitefully use you. If you act this way, you'll be protecting your own spirit and at the same time promoting love, harmony and unity. Make the quality choice not to allow someone's bad behaviour change your good character.

PS: This material (drawn of a true-life story) was prepared by -GSW- for the GSWMI Relationship and Marriage Ministries Classes will commence on February 1, 2021

