"I think endless talk about a referendum without any clear description of what the constitutional situation would be after that referendum is completely irrelevant now to the concerns of most people"

Before the visit, the prime minister had used the backdrop of the pandemic to make the case for the Union as he highlighted Treasury spending on furlough and business support as well as vaccine procurement and approval.

"I think endless talk about a referendum without any clear description of what the constitutional situation would be after that referendum is completely irrelevant now to the concerns of most people," Mr Johnson said. He added that the SNP had failed to set out what
