

Twitter Thread by Not dead...yet.

Not dead...yet.

@passivefool

Lot of startups who are yet to make profits are filing for IPOs globally. I'm reading the filings and the language is terrible. A few tips on how to do it right.

Here are the right terms to use instead of the current antiquated language.

We are making losses.

"We've been consistently making negative profits and growing year on year."

We don't yet have a business model.

"We're innovation leaders in several fast growing market segments"

Losses will increase for the foreseeable future.

"Blockchain"

EBITDA is negative

"Our future adjusted EBITDA margin is consistently positive"

We Work got it right with their Community adjusted EBITDA

Revenues aren't growing

"We think once Elon reaches Mars the, TAM will double and we'll be a near monopoly in Mars"

Too much competition, commoditized product

"We don't believe in nonsense like revenues or profitability. This is our competitive moat"

Business model may not sustainable

"Blockchain"

Revenue visibility is uncertain

"If you discount 2200 earnings, our valuations factor all uncertainties offering investors the best value in the sector"

<https://t.co/ZZmvVF27VB>

Product offerings aren't differentiated

"We use AI & ML for everything, including our employee ID cards"

— Not dead...yet. (@passivefool) July 20, 2021

Business may not survive with more capital

"We will continuously offer exposure to innovative business models based on AI, ML, Blockchain to investors by trapping the markets will follow on innovating stock offerings"

Burn is high

"We continuously invest at the cutting edge of humanity to unlock new frontiers"

Blockchain