[THREAD] How To Successfully Launch A Startup, Inverted

1/ Mention the incumbent in all of your marketing materials. That way, everyone knows you\u2019re 2nd best.

— Nicolas Cole (@Nicolascole77) February 11, 2021

4/ Marketing with a $0 budget @jamierusso <https://t.co/rXrEZJ2Z8Q>

When you're an underdog, you find innovative ways to get stuff done.

For solo-creators with $0 marketing budgets, start by building an audience-first product.

1. Build an audience
2. Create a product
3. Scale the solution

12/ How @goodmarketinghq hit 19K subscribers in a year <https://t.co/i1lctBKpr2>

May 2019. I wrote my first marketing article. A year later my email list hit 19,000.

No ads. No connections. No existing audience.

The site grew because I learnt how to push my content round the internet.

13/ Why you should post native content from @Nicolascole77 <https://t.co/rkvbiqHVjg>

Linking from one social platform to another is "the old way" of doing things.

Algorithms today disproportionately reward native content.

How?

Instead of linking 5 different social platforms to 1 piece of content, you want to copy/paste that 1 asset to 5 platforms.

— Nicolas Cole (@Nicolascole77) December 27, 2020

14/ How to come up with great copy from @craigclemens via @dickiebush <https://t.co/vDXckZR7We>

An absolute copywriting legend: @craigclemens

I recently dove into everything he's shared about his writing process.

And I've come away with a four-step framework for creating legendary copy.

15/ How to write conversational copy from @goodmarketinghq <https://t.co/oxVjFxl4Li>

Conversational copy is writing how you talk.

No sales megaphone. No business speak.

But that's easier said than done. So I've put together my guide.
