Marketing is harder than ever

Wanna quickly figure out what works with buyers?

You don't need to spend 100s of hours doing research

There are only 4 questions you *really* need to answer to get started

If you can these Qs, coming up with smart marketing ideas feels easy

Chasing investor money isn't for everyone.

I bootstrapped my business to $25M in revenue and a $100M+ acquisition.

Here's how you can build from nothing, too. A thread \U0001f9f5

It's shocking to me how many companies throw money at content marketing with zero strategy behind it just some loose terms to target for SEO.

You can get much better ROI if there's a method to the madness.

Some suggestions...

When I was a founder I was completely clueless about fundraising and what investors would ask me. And also why they were asking certain questions.

I don't think founders should ever be blindsided by the process.

The 40 hour workweek was established over a century ago.

Since then, we've invented 5G networks, automation, 3D printing, AR/VR, and a computer that can fit in your pocket.

Nearly all of the tools have changed, yet somehow ppl still think the way we work needs to stay the same.
