Twitter Thread by Seth Cotlar

Seth Cotlar
@SethCotlar

I can’t bring myself to watch Republican Senators like Cruz, Lee, and Sasse wax rhapsodic about the Constitution while the President they support is spreading disinformation about the election and accusing Biden, Obama, and Clinton of treason. Sorry, just can’t do it.

Anyone who’s read the writings of the founders knows full well they their beloved Trump is the Platonic form of the type of President the founders most feared, and that they epitomize the sort of short sighted and craven public officials they also desperately feared.

These GOP Senators are smart and well-read enough to understand how outlandish their President is, and how embarrassingly cowardly their behavior has been these past four years.

The chutzpah of these people to pass themselves off as great patriotic lovers of the founders’ Constitution. Feh.

If they loved the Constitution, they would be telling people not to vote for Trump until he agrees to accept the results of the election. Otherwise they are aiding and abetting an attempt to shred the Constitution. Shame on them,

And if Amy Coney Barrett has a shred of integrity, she would also declare that she will refuse to be seated on the SCOTUS if Trump refuses to accept the final election results as verified by the states that Federalists like her supposedly love.

There are few things more galling to me than rich, powerful people who sanctimoniously lecture poor Americans about "personal responsibility" and then cravenly shrink from the most basic civic responsibilities that come with the position of public trust they inhabit.

Personally, I think we a total and complete shutdown on Ted Cruz until he can explain why he's palling around with the head of the Pud Buoys.

Apologies for all of the typos in this thread. It's early here on the West Coast and the coffee has only now sunken in.