Twitter Thread by Decoy Ocelot

Decoy Ocelot
@OcelotDecoy

There will be an end to this thing, and its not as remote as it may seem. Focus on the light at the end of the tunnel. We just need to hold out for three more weeks.

Holding out for three more weeks is a recommendation for patriots not to engage in counter-productive action. People mustn't succumb to the anger, demoralization and frustration that they are currently experiencing.

This period is crucial, as the leftist mobilizations are all headed for their denouement. After the election, the restraint that is currently holding back the federal government will be removed.

After the election, the rules of engagement will change, as patriot and federal responses will no longer be constrained by election optics. This is the light at the end of the tunnel.

Once this variable is gone, the gloves come off. The federal government will be able to roll these guys up, and patriots will be free to declare open season on the communist insurgents.

Historically, these types of insurrection always end in the use of force. Sometimes the conflict takes on a life of its own, and the suppression must occur preemptively, before the uprising hits a self-sustaining threshold of violence.

The communists' plan is to hit this threshold, which is the mobilization of 3.5% of the population. Once that number of people are on the streets committing violence, it's game over for law and order. This has always been the objective of the riots.

However, a prolonged conflict of this nature that does not garner public support is unsustainable. The population becomes weary, and sympathy for violent causes wanes.

This is where we are: the initial insurrection has failed, and the remaining disorder is being used to sway the election. That said, veteran antifa rioters are still being kept in reserve as a last-ditch safeguard, should the left lose the election.

The only other window left to the communists for a mass uprising is to capitalize on post-election emotional reactions to a Biden-Harris loss.

Social disorder has been normalized in the past few months and the population has been desensitized long enough to the point where a post-election horizontal uprising could be induced.

This potential post-election insurrection would channel the mass liberal hysteria generated by a Trump win by giving it an outlet with street violence.

Given what is at stake, the best course of action is to avoid violence by all means, and to hold out for three more weeks.

If the cavalry is coming, it will arrive after election. If it's not, then the patriots have nothing to lose, all bets are off, and it's up to them to save the Republic.

Food for thought:

Kennedy once said that “Those who foolishly sought power by riding the back of the tiger usually end up inside it.” We see this now, as the Democrats are losing control of the violence they have started.

And since civilian violence has now been normalized, remember that if the worst should happen, and a Communist government steals the election, that the same violence used by the Communists to take power can be used by patriots to rise up and restore the Constitution.