Twitter Thread by Michael Krieger

Michael Krieger
@LibertyBlitz

Here's the big takeaway from the 2020 election. All the trends I've been expecting have been solidified and reinforced. A total and growing distrust in once revered institutions, especially media and pompous always wrong blue checks.

A feeling that faux "elites," oligarchs and the national security state are constantly lying and manipulating the public for ends that go against the public interest. Also more of an understanding you can't fundamentally change the system via voting for president.

Sanders, Trump supporters and non-voters will all increasingly feel this way in the coming years under a Biden/Harris administration. Both sides that lean populist, even if superficially, will now discount change via voting during these circuses.

This opens up the 2021-2025 period to outcomes that were previously incomprehensible. There's simply no trust or faith in anything, justifiably. The worst case scenario for cohesion would be Biden stepping aside and Harris being installed and this is not a zero chance event.

What we can expect is further macro decay on the geopolitical front as the empire continues to rot. Internal rot will continue domestically because the national security state oligarchy remains in charge. Hunger Games economy continues to accelerate.

What we'll end up with is large swaths of the population feeling increasingly disillusioned/helpless. This combined with a feeling that you can't change things via the methods we've been told you can opens stuff up to all sorts of possibilities, negative and positive. Combustive.

There's a good chance the various factions who've been preyed upon by the national security state oligarchy are further manipulated into fighting each other rather than uniting against the true oppressors. Punching down or sideways versus punching up. This is worst case scenario.

The best case scenario is people ditch party politics and focus on issues. Pick the issue, whether empire, Wall Street crime, big tech censorship and unite with others to form a powerful bloc. You aren't marrying people, you are prioritizing issues over superficial personalities.

Unfortunately, there's no evidence the American people are capable of this, even though it's been obvious this should be the strategy for over a decade. You can't rely on this. So you have to focus on yourself and the things you can control. Don't become a rhinoceros.

Bottom line is 2021-2025 is going to be very dicey, your world will be turned upside down even more than it has been. It will be during these years that the next several decades will be decided. So think very carefully about what you do and how you act.

Carefully guard your consciousness, you mind and your spirit. Our individual actions and mental state matter. A lot. You have the ability to make things better or worse for you and everyone around you. Choose wisely. This is a portal we're entering. Be safe and good luck.