

Twitter Thread by Jeremy Boreing

Jeremy Boreing

@JeremyDBoreing

It makes sense to me.

Donald Trump is the most energizing and polarizing force in American politics in living memory.

He turned out insane numbers both of lovers and haters. It's not hard to see the haters outnumber the lovers.

It\u2019s never make sense to me. <https://t.co/p58o1Xw47a>

— Cerno (@Cernovich) November 25, 2020

The 'you're telling me more people voted for Nobody Biden than Messiah Obama?!' incredulity ignores the reality of Trump.

No. No one voted for Biden. They voted against 'Literal Hitler'.

Of course they did. The media programmed them to. The academy. The swamp...

Trump's strength and weakness are his inability to avoid the spotlight. He wouldn't let the election be a referendum on Biden and the left. If he had, he might have blunted the turnout on the left.

...

Instead, he made it about himself - and he is the most hated (and lived) guy in America.

The people turned out to 'topple a dictator.' They voted 'like their lives depended on it.' They stopped 'fascism!'

Throw in the fact they didn't actually have to 'turnout' at all, they just had to fill in ballots that were mailed directly to them, and it's no surprise at all so many voted.

The left fundamentally altered the process of voting to create the surge. It worked. We're surprised?

I'm sure there was cheating at the fringes, but I think the path to this result was so clear it was marked on a map - a map the Dems followed to perfection, and Trump aided them unwittingly.