No, Mike Pence can't magically do anything on January 6th. No, Louie Gohment can't force the courts to give Pence magic powers. Trump has literally zero chance of magically overturning the election. Stop panicking over imaginary things. This is getting incredibly boring.

There won't be a civil war. No one will pull off a coup. There won't be martial law. None of these things are real.

It's over. But the more clear it becomes that it's over, the fantasizers on Trump's side, and the panickers on our side, become more hallucinatory about it.

We have a pandemic, people dying, an economic crisis, people starving, and a runoff election that's for all the marbles. Yet you're going to focus on IMAGINARY doomsday scenarios? None of what's going on is real enough for you? You have to go invent more bad things? Come on.

Those of us who have fought so hard for four years, deserve better than to have our agenda derailed by the doomsday panickers on our side. They don't care about winning, they're just addicted to the adrenaline rush of telling themselves they're going to lose.

In fact the panickers on our side, and the fantasizers on Trump's side, deserve each other. Both completely removed from reality. Neither interested in helping their own side. Just a shared interest in hallucinating over laugh out loud imaginary scenarios. And of no use to anyone
