google censorship of great barrington declaration: update.

this morning, there was no link to it in a direct google search.

now, there is.

could this be because certain internet felines noticed this and @chiproytx and @tedcruz helped call them out on this?

we may never know.

if you missed it, the original thread was here:

(and yes, lots of people duplicated my finding this morning)

i'd be curious to see what they are all seeing now.

from the "make orwell fiction again" files:

google has memory holed the great barrington declaration not only have they wiped it from the top results, they have salted it with false claims about "climate denial"

it's pure, simple propaganda

here's bing (who plays it straight) pic.twitter.com/kTdH8zXia

— el gato malo (@boriquagato) October 10, 2020

so, google went from "direly absurdly slanted to the point of being undeniably caught red handed" to "just heavily slanted toward comically partisan sites and fringe views" it's not a full win, but it's a step in the right direction.

perhaps we all played some role.

i hope so.

public pressure and cancel culture works both ways and google knows they can only push this so far let's keep watching and keep calling fouls when we see them it's vital to a high functioning internet and informational ecosystem consumer choice is what keeps businesses in line

i wish they would not censor & shape data, but i support their right to do what they like. it's a private business but i also support transparency. if they ARE going to do this then people should know

no memory holes

let's circle the censorship in red pen and route around it and the internet routes around damage. so do free markets.

switching search engines takes 2 seconds so you CAN choose. it costs nothing.

remember: you are google's product. they sell you to advertisers. and they NEED you.

demand better from them.
