Every year I invite non-Native folks who are celebrating the colonial holiday to do something in support of Native people. This holiday isn't a happy one for a lot of folks, but if you would like to extend some solidarity to Native folks this weekend, here's a thread for that.

This thread is a list of groups and people I will personally be supporting today and I invite you all to join me. First up, @4directionsvote is committed to the full enfranchisement of Native people. To fight Native voter suppression, you can donate here: https://t.co/zrueRikEMe

Woodland Women is a group that offers mutual support & healing for women on my rez. It's a crucial support system. They make regalia each yr to give away at the holidays. They need supplies & would like to add other care package items for folks in crisis. https://t.co/yK4lDmhZ8G

To support a Native mom who has been doing a whole lot of mutual aid work, you can give to Julzzzzrich@gmail.com on via paypal.

This Indigenous land defender who is always showing up for others, and for the struggle, could use help paying a few bills.

From a dear friend: "Over the past month, our relatives have been in support at the frontlines of both Kumeyaay and Akimel/Hia-Ced/Tohono O'odham border wall resistance movements. They've come up against some vehicle repair issues and need help." https://t.co/dumvmW4dOp

.@Chi_Nations is a diverse group of Native youth focused on activism, political education and community care in Chicago. At present, their mutual aid food distribution program could use a boost for the winter. (They also need more PPE to distribute.) Venmo: chi-nations

This Indigenous mom in Chicago is an unstoppable force. From mutual aid to coordinating direct actions or leading political ed, she's a powerhouse. And she gets paid for almost nothing she does. Let's help keep her afloat.

This family has a history of helping other Indigenous people in trouble find safe shelter and passage. They recently took in a Native family and a criminalized Indigenous youth who would otherwise be unsheltered during the pandemic. Paypal: Kosmikjustice@gmail.com

This young Native activist, who is quite dear to me, has already made historic contributions to our movements. Right now, his rez is on lockdown until December 3 bc of the virus. Things are very hard and money is needed. https://t.co/ClieNV3QOC
