Twitter Thread by MorningStar

MorningStar
@AfrikaanGod

I've been seeing tweets from women demanding not to be treated as sex objects so I figured an exposition on the subject matter may help us all. First, let's remind ourselves what a sex object is. In simple terms, a sex object is a person who is regarded primarily...

1/12

in terms of their sexual attractiveness or availability.

When women post pictures that highlight their boobs and ass on social media, (which they do all the time) they primarily want men to see how sexually attractive they are. In other words they want men to see them...

2/12

as sex objects and that external validation in turn, boosts their self esteem.

It's called thirst trap because that's exactly the effect they want to achieve. They want men to thirst for them. On a conscious and subconscious level, they want you to see them as an...

3/12

object of sexual desire.

And contrary to what some would have you believe, it's absolutely normal for heterosexual men to see women they're attracted to as sex objects.

It has nothing to do with misogyny and this is proved by the fact that homosexual men see men they...

4/12

are sexually attracted to as sex objects. If heterosexual men are misogynists in this regard, then homosexual men are man-haters.

Go through the TL and you'll see tweets like "If you can't AFFORD EXPENSIVE women, stop trying to date them" They've made themselves into...

5/12

expensive objects and warn everyone who can't AFFORD the object they've become to back off.

A study was made of 328 personal advertisements sampled from a major Canadian newspaper. It was found that gender differences for desired spousal attributes were consistent with...

6/12

traditional sex role stereotypes: Women prioritised employment, financial and intellectual status with regards to men (success objectification) while men prioritised physical appearance.

This shows that Women are sex objects as much as men are success objects.

7/12

When a man and a woman go on a date, The woman checks him out to see if he can 'take care of her' and the man checks her out to see if she's worth sleeping with. Of course there are exceptions and any semi-intelligent person knows that should go without saying.

8/12

If men don't cry for being objectified by women, then women have no right to cry about being objectified by men. She who comes to equity must come with clean hands.

Women do all they can to look like sex objects, know they're sex objects and leverage their sexiness...

9/12

to get what they want from men yet demand not to be seen as sex objects. Looks like they're trying to unlock a new level of cognitive dissonance.

They know that men are primarily interested in the sexual attractiveness of a woman and do everything they can to highlight...

10/12

their sexiness. It is for this reason that one of the biggest songs of 2020 which resonated with a lot of women is titled 'Wet Ass Pussy.'

So a woman who flaunts her sexuality but demands not to be seen as a sex object is like a man who flaunts his wealth but demands...

not to be seen as a success object. It's a dishonest delusion that won't happen. You can't have it both ways.

With these few points of mine, I hope I have been able to convince you that women are indeed sex objects. Not all, but more than enough to arrive at this conclusion.

You objectify yourself by posting pictures captioned 'I'm a snack' or 'I'm a full course meal' and in the same breathe demand not to be objectified?