We're not done.

Don't worry it only starts with a poll but if you have a degree in nigga theory, you probably imagine this is because "the pussy game ridiculous"

Words are not actions.
But boy is that a weird shift, huh?

Important though and why I'm really posting this.
This is the first time I've seen this one.

The first reason that wasn't a nullification or "I had a bad day"

If this went further I have theories on things that I'd be going off on right now but, this alone isn't enough.

You already know the joke because it's just that normal.

I don't even need to say what the logic is here because you know that too.

You probably always thought it was a strange thing.

>If they don't look for solutions and just want an emotional catharsis, does that mean they already know how to solve something?

That conclusion is what happens when it's framed as a contrast.

And now you know the reality of how that actually plays out.

You could connect this to a thousand different things if you accept it's a fundamental behavior. Why has there never been a society headed by women that ever progressed anywhere? Why is tolerance such an abnormal thing to male dominated societies?

Why are revolutions almost always headed by men? Why is art, literature etc. you get the point if you were to do that.

Or, more presently:

Why is everything in our society about one big display that makes things seem so grand and so important and so absolutely and totally solved? Yet our crises never seem to actually change anything. Everything is a scandal in it's nature.

Yet it results in nothing.

And we seem perpetually stuck in an emotional roller-coaster of highs and lows.

Well, you know.

Ugh, like, why would I like, ugh, ever want to talk about my feelings when I could be getting fucking STUFFED

So the male reason is typically, "want fug" and the female reasons seem to be...pretty much the same thing plus "actually I am emotionally a child"

Very cool, God!
