Twitter Thread by SimonBarreBrisebois

SimonBarreBrisebois
@SBarrBrisebois

Precisely my philosophy. By interacting with people with different opinions can we learn things that we need to improve or maintain. & it helps shatter this horrible manichean perspective that one side is good & the other is evil, which people in politics tend to use too much.

> I prefer people who have different political opinions to me, but who are kind and decent, than people with the same political opinions as me but who are vindictive and bullying.
>
> — James Melville (@JamesMelville) January 11, 2021