Twitter Thread by Emily Holshouser

Emily Holshouser
@emilyytayylor

Earlier today, a group of anti-mask protestors did maskless shopping at the Beverly Connection Target in West L.A. After they entered, they got into a few verbal altercations with customers.

A shopper aimed a bottle of cleaning spray at the anti-maskers. He seemed to spray them with the cleaning liquid.

“It’s not a pandmic, it’s a plan-demic, it’s a scam-demic,” one of the anti-maskers said to a man who engaged with them for a few minutes.

Soon after, two LAPD officers entered the store, approached for crowd and spoke with them for a few minutes. The man who engaged with group earlier asked for them to be removed from the store.

The officers left a few minutes later without making arrests or giving citations that I know of.

They moved to the front of the store where they got into some arguments with people, including this girl who gave them middle fingers as she walked away.

They sang “We’re Not Gonna Take It” at the front of the store while customers trying to check out looked on and occasionally argued with them.

They then danced to “Party In The USA” by Miley Cyrus, also at the front of the store.

hi
los angeles