Growth Tactics

@GrowthTactics

We found 6 startups that are growing way faster than everyone else.

We figured out their unconventional growth tactics.

This thread walks you through how to repeat them for yourself.

1/6 Experiment with timing.

Here's a clever example:

@brooklinen "leaked" a time-bounded discount and had one of their best revenue days of the year.

Great startups experiment not only with copy/creative, but also framing.

EMAILS

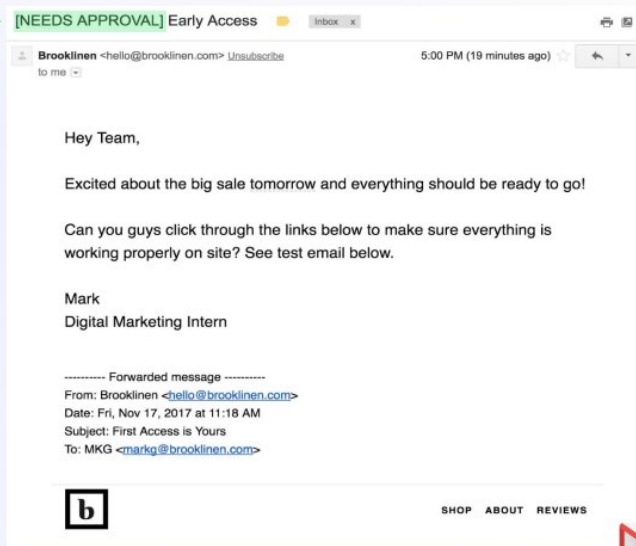

Get creative with promo emails

Brooklinen staged a
"mistake" email before
Black Friday.

Customers jumped on it, and they had one of their best ever revenue day

DEMAND CURVE

2/6 Get people to FEEL the problem your startup solves.

Here's how Muzzle (notification hiding tool) uses their site to visualize the problem:

- Shows cringey notifications
- Makes them super vulgar
- Points out how Muzzle puts an end to this during Zoom calls

LANDING PAGES

Add images that visualize the problem

The screenshot shows the Muzzle landing page. On the left, there's a logo with a dog's head, the word 'muzzle', and the tagline 'a simple mac app to silence embarrassing notifications while screensharing'. Below this is a yellow 'Download' button with a download icon. At the bottom, it says 'Automatically turn on Do Not Disturb when screensharing starts. Works with almost everything, including.' and shows icons for various apps. On the right, there's a list of example notifications from different contacts, each with a profile picture, name, and message. A green line points from the text 'Show don't tell: Hero image visualizes the problem' to the notification list. Another text 'Your CTA becomes the obvious solution' points to the 'Download' button.

Your CTA becomes the obvious solution

DEMAND CURVE

3/6 Poach potential customers from competitors:

- Create landing pages that compare you against them
- Address customers' biggest objections
- Show your product in action

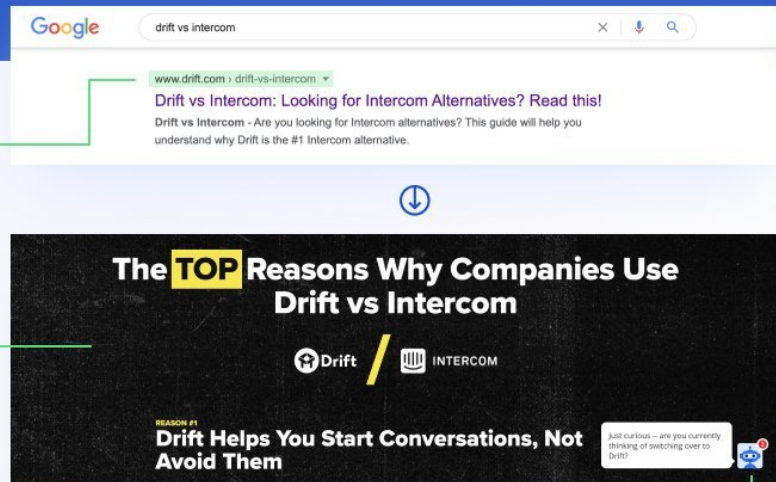

Then, when people search for you versus your competitors, you'll show up on the Google results page.

How to win customers from competitors

Drift created landing pages for comparison Google queries

People know Intercom. Drift piggybacks off them to show why they're better

Chatbot showcases their product with targeted question

4/6 Improve your attribution.

It's often unclear what drives a purchase.

So try this:

- Add a post-purchase survey asking customers how they found you
- Remove friction—limit choices. Make it super easy to quickly select the right one

Attribution helps you double down.

How to improve attribution

Thanks for upgrading!

Immediately post-purchase, Webflow asks customers where they heard about them

Remote friction: Limited options make it easy for customers

Create tension: Webflow forces a submission to proceed

DEMAND CURVE

5/6 Get more people to open and read your emails.

How? Don't hide behind a company name:

- Set yourself as the sender name.
- Make your email icon your headshot.

Most importantly: Write using your real, friendly voice.

DEMAND CURVE

6/6 Create better landing pages:

- Handle the most obvious objection upfront
- Use negative space to direct people's eyes to your header

Key: Don't give people too much to read. Be clear then get out of their way.

LANDING PAGES

Write header copy that visitors can't ignore

1. Unmistakable value prop: learn a language

2. "Free" lets them know this isn't a sales pitch

3. Layout: Negative space makes copy hard to ignore
