@arunindy

There is a serious misreading, particularly on the Left, as to what is going on with Gamestonks, $GME, $AMC, $BB, $NOK, the whole kit and kaboodle. Equating this with the Capitol Hill insurrection or with Trump or 4Chan is a mistake. Thread.

A lot of leftists are imposing their ideology on Gamestonk, rather than analyzing the conditions. This is a good explainer by @JamesSurowiecki. Using social media, options, and discount brokers, the mob figured out a way to exploit Wall Street. <https://t.co/1YdfWGpbua>

Of course it's not so simple. Wall Street loses, Wall Street wins. @alexisgoldstein explains how some hedge funds make a killing even as some take a bath. But 1000s of retail investors are being screwed by Wall St and Washington in all of this. <https://t.co/Se8LpPt54w>

Additionally, three Wall Street oligarchs have made a collective $2 billion of GameStop alone. Michael Bury, one of the famous traders from "The Big Short," has also apparently made $250 million. So, yes, rich are getting richer. <https://t.co/zpxOGjfwE9>
<https://t.co/Ef8rsm8LGN>

But if all you focus on is the wealthy, then you cannot explain why there is blatant market manipulation going on with many brokers suddenly preventing retail investors from buying "meme stocks" like GME, AMC, BB, NOK, BBBY. In fact, they can only sell. Who does that benefit?

AOC, Rashida Tlaib, Ro Khanna (and Ted Cruz) are lambasting Robinhood and calling for a probe as to its "market manipulation." Lots of small investors are losing their shirts. Yeah, it was a laughable, absurd get-rich-quick scheme. BUT <https://t.co/BEBqGGp1aZ>

Small investors were collectively manipulating edges of a system rigged for big banks and brokers by Washington & Federal Reserve. Since markets crashed last March, the Fed has created a massive stock bubble, which has seen trillion$ flow to uber-rich. <https://t.co/QQIFFmZ6fG>

People want to burn down Wall Street, calling for a revolution, protests. This is sentiment on many sites, not just r/WallStreetbets. The mob is furious that having figured out how to make fast bucks at expense of some firms, they are being shut down probably illegally.

Thank god for our bros in Asia and Europe diving in on this. Got word from across the pond that the news is starting to spread like a California wildfire that the UK can steal some rich Americans money.

I always figured the global uprising would be more burning down buildings and less getting on my phone at 4am to check stonks. But this is the fight I'm built for.

Fuckin right, revolution while smoking weed and watching netflix? Ok fine.... i guess i can attend this one

This from @nytimes says everything ab America right now. An Evangelical pastor and his wife made $1,700 from GameStop and put it toward a new bed. How sad is that? They are pissed at how much the rich made off the 2008 financial crisis. "Eat the rich" is literally their attitude

Justin Speak, 27, an evangelical pastor in California, and his wife, who recently left her job to raise their children, have made $1,700 off GameStop in the past week. Mr. Speak said that so far they had mainly put the money toward a new bed. He described a sense of frustration at how well those in the financial sector have done since the financial crisis of 2008.

"There's a catharsis to actually making money off their pain a little bit," he said of his modest earnings from GameStop. His wife put it more bluntly: "Eat the rich."

Compare this to general market, not just FAANG. Companies like Tesla, Palantir, Airbnb have seen massive run-ups in stocks. They are all shit in terms of profit, but Fed's easy money has allowed banks and pros to rake in hundreds of billions of $$.

TSLA has market cap close to $1 trillion. It's earning per share is $.50. Normal price to earnings ratio is about 15. TSLA? It's p/e is 1,675. Elon Musk the wealthiest man in world this month. (And Musk has joined in the Gamestonk bubble.)

Tesla soaring like a rocket has created a massive bubble in electric vehicle stocks. Take Blink Charging, BLNK. It's a small manufacturer of charging stations losing money. It's a crap company, but its shares are up 5,000% in last year. This is considered "normal."

Since March, Dow has soared 63%. It's insane and absurd. It's pure market manipulation by the Fed, combined with Trump's deregulation, on top of decades of bipartisan deregulation. This is what people are pissed about.

It's a huge mistake to dismiss Gamestonk as battle between the rich or see small investors as equivalent of Capitol Hill riot - which some Leftists do. Few Americans have faith in "the system," and fewer have faith in the Left. But there is a real opportunity here.

Others sneer at small investors, "Oh now you realize the system is rigged?" That's dumb. Good organizers know you work w/ people where they're at. And people are furious. It's also dumb to think this a revolution, but that anger could be harnessed against Wall St.

People are seeing system rigged against them in real time. Left-leaning politicians like @AOC agree. No, you are not going to convince denizens of r/WallStreetBets to become socialists, but you could convince them to break up big banks and crack down on market manipulation.

If you don't harness this anger against Wall Street, then fascists will. They will paint this as a nefarious international conspiracy w/ or w/o blatant anti-Semitic overtones. Use it as a battering ram against the ruling class, rather than let the right exploit it. END

One more thing. There are obviously lots of Trump-type bros in Gamestonk. But they differ from fascist mob on 1/6. They are in it for money. But these bubbles also draw in tons of small investors across political spectrum. Don't lose sight of that.

The @nytimes found an out-of-work Black-Latino cook, a teen, and the Evangelical couple who all made money on GameStop, some very little. That many people see more hope in Gamestonk than social movements should be grappled with seriously.
