EMAs / Momentum

<https://t.co/FnO1w8ydX4>

No one explains EMAs either, so here are my 9/20 EMA rules. I have to give credit to @MullinsMomentum for introducing me to these. I adopted some stuff from him, and the rest I developed my own way of using them. Here's a thread of how I use them:

Supply and Demand.

Why and how 90% of retail traders lose and how you can join the 10% that win. This is by far the most important thread I've made. I truly hope this helps change your lives.

Areas where you can enter trades for minimal risk and maximum reward:

<https://t.co/08ey57sUOJ>

The largest issue from what I've seen for new traders is determining where to enter trades. Most traders get caught chasing or adding in poor areas and then sell for losses. Here's a thread on some areas where you can enter trades for minimal risk and maximum reward:

Options tips: <https://t.co/2w2eufhYjc>

Some tips and stuff that has worked well for me in options so far:

- Target fresh zones - I have a high conviction in these to work in my favor
- Never try to guess the top on a stock running on low volume. These go through zones
- Always scale into zones

Profit targets: <https://t.co/qDm2uaAZMW>

Use supply and demand to enter trades and support and resistances as profit targets. You don't have to obsess over daily levels. I like to use the 1h chart and less with recent price action to look for support and resistances to determine where I'll scale profits from my entry pic.twitter.com/Jr0jehUiJ3
