

Twitter Thread by David Yocum

David Yocum

@YocumsOptions

Educational Resource Thread! ■

Key Takeaways from Fintwit's Best Traders

If you want to be the best, you need to spend time studying the best. This article is about some of my favorite posts from the best in technical analysis and the keys to their success.

@ChartingOptions

@ThetaWarrior

@Trendspider_J

Key Takeaways from Fintwit's Best Traders

FinTwit is full of education and a wide variety of information. In this article I will be focusing on some of the best traders on twitter and why they have become successful. It is important to note that this article does not cover everything that makes these traders successful but rather these are my key takeaways from each person that have benefited me in my trading. I am not a financial advisor nor should any of the information in this article be construed as financial advice.

1. Charting Options (@ChartingOptions)

ChartingOptions
@ChartingOptions

...

#ActSeq is an in-house hashtag that represents an active sequence, or active trend.

Technically speaking, it represents a stock who's share price is above 3 key daily EMAs—the 8, 21, and 50. I look for a cross of the 8 over the 21 as an initial signal of a potential #ActSeq.

Charting Options created the #ActSeq strategy which has been a key component of my trading strategies. The #ActSeq uses the 8/21 EMAs primarily. These EMAs are great to use to identify trends and to find potential dip buying opportunities (vise versa in a downtrend). If the 8 EMA crosses the 21 EMA, we can assume the bulls have the momentum therefore restricting our buying opportunities to calls - why fight the momentum?

Key Takeaway: Follow the trend

*I am not a financial advisor nor should this be construed as financial advice.