

Twitter Thread by Adhish|■■■■■

Adhish|■■■■■

@Adhish_RS

I see a trend on SM of retail investors trying to copy stock ideas of those whom they view as knowledgeable investors. Please DO NOT do this. Do your own research & build/follow your own process. Buying a business on borrowed conviction is a terrible idea. 1/n

If you're lucky, you'll end up copying someone like @ishmohit1 or @itsTarH who are open about their thesis/anti-thesis pointers and entry & exit from a position. If you're unlucky you might end getting manipulated or left with outdated info about someone's invested position. 2/n

Either way, u cannot clone someone's conviction, which is why you'll never get their results. Better 2 make modest returns with conviction based on ur own research, instead of trying to clone others. Network, share ideas, data & views. But say NO 2 copy-pasting stock ideas. 3/n

If you respect & r impressed by someone, please study their process. Copy the parts that work for you. In the end, you get the results that you've earned. Taking the lazy approach of ■■ stock ■■■ ■■ will never make you wealthy. Invest in yourself & the results will follow 4/n